un-covered it, but I dis-covered it!" he added triumphantly. "Because you see I was the first to speak of it!" "Well, as long as you want all the glory of the thing," said Andy, "supposing you do a little of the work. Supposing you lift the cover off!"

"HE TUGGED WITH ALL HIS MIGHT."

"Anything to be obliging, I'm sure!" replied the Captain, with what was meant to be an airy flourish of his right arm.

He tugged with all his might at the ring but could not budge it an inch.

"Why, Captain!" cried Andy, almost choking with laughter, "how do you expect to pull up the lid when you're standing on it yourself!"

and then fell asleep again. Ham went up to the lion and bowed.

"Will you have fish balls, snowballs or cannon balls?" he asked.

"I'LL HAVE A LITTLE FRIED HAM!" SAID THE LION.

"I think I will have a little fried ham!" His Highness answered grimly, staring fixedly at the poor man.
