PREFACE

TO THE FOURTH AMERICAN EDITION.

BY DR. JOHN F. GRAY.

At the instance of Mr. Radde, the publisher, I have examined the manuscript of the new edition of Jahr's Hand-book, prepared by Dr. Snelling, the diligent and worthy successor of my cherished pupil and beloved friend, the late Dr. A. Gerald Hull.

It will prove very gratifying to most practitioners to find that Dr. Hull's successor, in this indispensable hand-book of our school, has faithfully preserved, not only the liberal spirit and scheme of the preceding editions, but all the contributions of his deeply lamented predecessor, in their original form. He has, moreover, carefully collated from all good sources over two hundred pages of useful new matter, for the clinical chapters of this first volume. This important task, as far as I am able to judge, fairly and ably brings the hurried practitioner face to face with the best adjuvants to his responsible duties which modern and recent researches and experience have added to clinical medicine.

Dr. Snelling's edition is to the homœopathic practice of to-day just what Dr. Hull's first one was to that of 1840.

Clinical conjectures, when carefully constructed from the whole retrospect of medical literature, are guides to the successful use of our materia medica. For, without such aids as the present editor and his predecessors have furnished, it would be impossible to make a selection between half a dozen very dissimilar, but, by the text of the SYMPTOMATOLOGY and REPERTORY, equally indicated drugs—a predicament in which the practitioner constantly finds himself placed in the chamber of the invalid.

All honor, then, to HAHNEMANN, HARTLAUB, TRINKS, FLEISCHMANN, JAHR, HERING, HULL, HEMPEL, GUERNSEY, and their brave young successor, SNELLING! Let us thank them for their necessary and useful work.
