The Journal of the College Theology Society

A journal exploring developments in Catholic theology, the total Christian tradition, human religious experience, and the concerns of creative teaching from the college and university environment.

“What’s in a name?” For Horizons, perhaps everything. This issue features names long associated with Horizons—founding Co-Editor Bernard Prusak, former Associate Editor Norbert Rigali, current Associate Editors Lawrence Cunningham and Mary Ann Hinsdale, and such frequent past authors as Joseph Bracken, Dennis Doyle, Robert Masson, and William Portier. They are joined by many others familiar to us all, including Anne Clifford, our new President of the College Theology Society. We especially welcome Avery Cardinal Dulles participating in our Editorial Symposium on his “Catholicism 101.” Well known names are also interestingly paired in some of our titles and essays: Karl Rahner and Leonard Bernstein, Leonardo Boff and Gisbert Greshake, Bernard Lonergan and Alfred North Whitehead.

After a distinguished career at Indiana University Mary Jo Weaver has retired from teaching and all other aspects of academic life, including, she claims, her zealous support of the Indiana Hoosiers in basketball and the Fighting Irish in football. For many years she has been a generous and valuable Associate Editor, and I am grateful for all her astute contributions. She will be missed here.

I also want to thank all my other colleagues who have given so much to Horizons over the years and have made my tenure as Editor so easy and enjoyable. In this instance I will not begin to name names. They include, of course, CTS officers and all those listed formally as Editors, whether Associate, Book Review, or Business. But there are also many more not so listed who have served generously and significantly as manuscript reviewers. And I am especially grateful to the fine authors and book reviewers whose writing has graced our pages. In the end, however, Horizons would not function without the dedicated and expert work of the Editorial Assistant, and we have been blessed with two wonderful ones, who must be named: first Teresa Byrne, and now Irene Noble. As Anthony Godziewa carries us forward, great thanks to you all!
