NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

PROFESSOR ERIC FERNIE is an architectural historian with a special interest in the Middle Ages, on which he has published widely. Before his retirement he was Director of the Courtauld Institute of Art from 1995 to 2003.

DR DAVID YEOMANS taught at the Liverpool and Manchester schools of architecture. He is an engineer with a Ph.D. in Architectural History and extensive experience of architectural conservation. He is the Vice Chairman of the Construction History Society and was formerly Secretary (now Honorary Member) of the International Scientific Committee on the Analysis and Restoration of Structures of Architectural Heritage (ISCARSAH).

DR JAMES G. COOPER is an Assistant Professor at Pennsylvania State University where he teaches Architectural Design and Visual Communications in the Stuckeman School of Architecture and Landscape Architecture. He studied Architecture at Ryerson University, Toronto. After six years of professional practice, he completed his Masters in Architecture at the University of Michigan (1992) and subsequently studied Architectural History at the University of Virginia (Masters degree, 1998; Ph.D., 2001). His research interests include: Ancient Greco-Roman Architecture and Urbanism; Italian Renaissance and Baroque Architecture and Urbanism; and nineteenth and early twentieth century European Architecture and Urbanism.

PROFESSOR IAN CAMPBELL is Professor of Architectural History and Theory at Edinburgh College of Art/University of Edinburgh. He has written several articles on aspects of Scottish and Irish Renaissance Architecture, the most recent being 'The Peripheries strike back: Romanesque and Early Gothic Revival as a reaction to Fourteenth-Century Marginalisation in Scotland, Ireland and Italy', in S. Hoppe (ed.) Stil und Bedeutung (Regensburg 2008). During 2010–12 he is Rudolf Wittkower Guest Professor at the Bibliotheca Hertziana, the Max-Planck Institute for Art History in Rome, where he is preparing an edition of Pirro Ligorio's Oxford Codex in collaboration with Professor Maria Luisa Madonna.

DR AONGHUS MACKECHNIE is an architectural historian employed by Historic Scotland. His research has focussed on the Renaissance and Early Modern periods in Scotland and on the culture of the Highlands. He is author of Carragh-Chuimhne (2004), a study of Gaeldom's monuments, co-author (with Miles Glendinning) of A History of Scottish Architecture (1996) and Scottish Architecture (Thames & Hudson, 2004), and with Audrey Dakin and Miles Glendinning is currently co-editing Scotland's Castle Culture (forthcoming, 2011).

DR FRANCESCO RUSSO graduated in Liberal Arts (Lettere Moderne) at the University of Naples Federico II with a dissertation in History of Art Criticism, 'La fondazione del Duomo di Napoli attraverso le fonti, dal XII al XVII secolo'. He then secured a Doctoral Fellowship at the same university; his Ph.D. was entitled 'La fortuna dei Primitivi nella letteratura erudita Campana. Napoli e Capua tra la fine del XVI e la metà del XVII secolo'. In 2007 he won the postdoctoral San Paolo Fellowship at the Institut National d'Histoire de l'Art (INHA) of Paris for work on Mabillon and Montfaucon's studies of Italian Medieval heritage. He subsequently obtained a post-doctoral teaching qualification in History of Art and is currently teaching that discipline in an Italian secondary school. He has published several articles in France and Italy on various aspects of antiquarianism and its consequences from the sixteenth to nineteenth centuries.

DR OLIVIA HORSEFALL TURNER studied History and History of Art at Cambridge and was awarded the Clare-Mellon Fellowship to Yale University where she took a Masters in History of Art. She studied for her Ph.D. at University College London, and conducted post-doctoral research at the Irish Art Research Centre, Trinity College Dublin. She is now an Architectural Investigator at

English Heritage and a Research Associate at Trinity College Dublin. Her research focuses on seventeenth- and eighteenth-century architecture in Britain, with a particular interest in antiquarianism, the after-lives of medieval buildings, and architectural description.

JOCELYN ANDERSON studied History of Art and English at McGill University and is now a Ph.D. candidate at the Courtauld Institute of Art, London. The working title of her dissertation is 'Remaking the Country House: Country-House Guidebooks in the Late Eighteenth and Early Nineteenth Centuries'. In addition to her studies, she has taught at the Courtauld and she is a member of the editorial group of immediations, the Courtauld's peer-reviewed, student-run journal. She will be a visiting scholar at the Yale Center for British Art in the spring of 2012.

PHILIP ASPIN studied History at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, where he is now reading for a doctorate on the Gothic Revival in early 19th-century England. In 2009 he won the SAHGB Hawksmoor Essay Medal with an earlier version of the article printed in this journal.

DR HENRIK SCHOENEFELDT studied Architecture at the Prince's Foundation for Architecture, Portsmouth University and TU-Wien. In 2007 he was awarded an M.Phil. in Environmental Design at the University of Cambridge, where he recently completed a Ph.D. on the history of all-glass buildings in the nineteenth century. He was awarded the LKE Ozolins scholarship from the Royal Institute of British Architects and bursaries from the Kurt Hahn and Cambridge European Trusts. In September 2011 he takes up the post of Lecturer in Sustainable Architecture at the University of Kent.

DR JESSICA HOLLAND studied Architecture at the University of Portsmouth and recently completed her Ph.D. thesis on the Modernist buildings of the British architect Oliver Hill. She is currently undertaking further research into interwar British Modernism. In 2010 she won the SAHGB Hawksmoor Essay Medal with an earlier version of the article printed in this journal.

DR HARRY CHARRINGTON is Lecturer in Architecture at the University of Bath. He studied Architecture at Cambridge and subsequently combined academic posts with practice, including time working at the office of Alvar Aalto and Co. in Finland. In 2008 he completed his doctorate at the London School of Economics on the social and artistic practice of the Aalto atelier, on which he has published widely. This subject continues to form a major part of his research interests, together with suburbia and the relationship of planning and design.

DR ALISTAIR FAIR is a Research Associate in the Department of Architecture at the University of Cambridge, where he is also a Junior Research Fellow at Wolfson College. He studied Modern History at Oxford and History of Art at the Courtauld Institute of Art before completing his Ph.D. at Cambridge. The subject of his doctoral thesis, an architectural history of British theatre between 1926 and 1991, reflected his particular interest in twentieth-century public and institutional buildings. Forthcoming publications include an article on 1970s theatres in Twentieth-Century Architecture 10 (2011) and a co-written book, Geometry and Atmosphere: theatre buildings from vision to reality (Ashgate, 2011). In addition to continuing work on theatres, he is also investigating hospital architecture as part of a multi-disciplinary EPSRC-funded project.

DR LOUISE CAMPBELL is Reader in History of Art at the University of Warwick. Her publications include Coventry Cathedral: Art and Architecture in Post-war Britain (Oxford, 1996) and Twentieth-Century Architecture and its Histories published for the SAHGB in 2000; she is co-editor with Miles Glendinning and Jane Thomas of Sir Basil Spence: Buildings and Projects (RIBA, 2011, forthcoming). Her current research investigates British architecture and public art in the post-war period. She has been awarded a Paul Mellon Centre Senior Fellowship for 2011–12 in order to complete a book on the history of artists' habitats.
