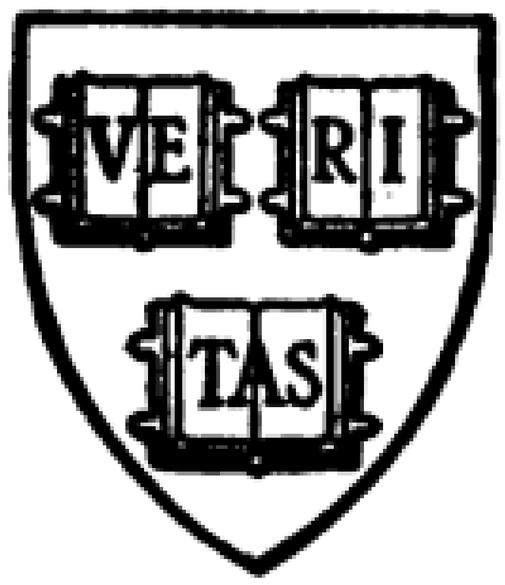
HD WIDENER
HW P74J I

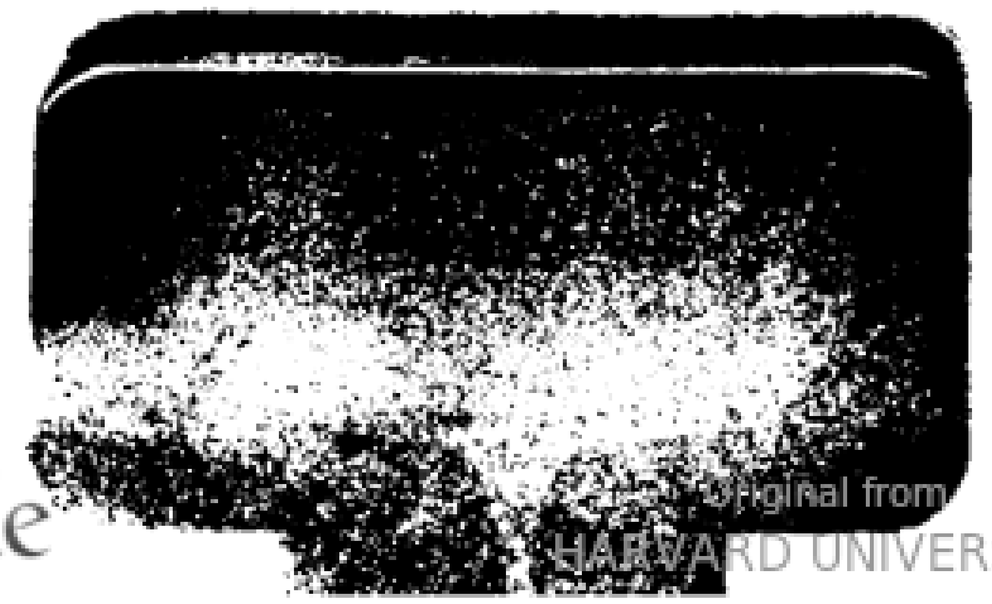
Digitized by Google

Original from
HARVARD UNIVERSITY

2454.932



HARVARD
COLLEGE
LIBRARY



Digitized by Google
Original from
HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Digitized by Google

Original from
HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Digitized by Google

Original from
HARVARD UNIVERSITY

W. A. Greene -

from H. P. G.

1904

Digitized by Google

Original from
HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Digitized by Google

Original from
HARVARD UNIVERSITY

The Wisdom of Robert Louis Stevenson

Digitized by Google

Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Digitized by Google

Original from
HARVARD UNIVERSITY

The Wisdom
of
Robert Louis Stevenson

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED
FROM HIS WRITINGS

NEW YORK
Scott-Thaw Co., 542 Fifth Ave.
MCMIV

Digitized by Google
Original from
HARVARD UNIVERSITY

20 4.932

Copyright 1904 by SCOTT-THAW CO.

HARVARD COLLEGE LIBRARY

The Plimpton Press Norwood Mass.

Digitized by Google

Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

EDITOR'S NOTE, xv
STEVENSON, ROBERT LOUIS,—A Portrait of Himself, xvii
LIFE AND DEATH
Live To-day the Day's Life, 1
Preserve the Quality of Youth, 2
Truth of Intercourse, 2
Between Friends, 3
Between Parent and Child, 3
Between Lovers, 3
Between Man and Wife, 4
Deceit, 5
Falling in Love, 6–8
Love Brings with it the Highest Sense of the Pleasure of Living, 8
The Happy Lover is the Condescending Gentleman, 9
Sweethearts, 10
Love's Essence is Kindness, 10–12
Death, 13, 14
Our Lives are Bound Tenderly to Life through Friendship, 14–16
Honesty in Business, 16
Busyness, a Symptom of Deficient Vitality, 16–19

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

LIFE AND DEATH—Continued
Our Healthy Indifference to Death, 19–21
The Last Thing a Brave Man Thinks of is Death, 21–23
To be Over-wise is to Ossify, 23
Prudence is Death to Generosity, 24
The True Lover of Living, 24–26
Better to Lose Health like a Spendthrift than Waste it like a Miser, 26–27
Attempt the Leap even though Death Catch you in Mid-air, 27–28
The Young Man and Death, 28–30
Fame, 30, 31
Great Deeds Breed their Kind, 31–33
Business and Pleasure, 33
How to Think of Death, 33, 34
Instability of Friendship, 34, 35
General Occupation, 35
Declarations of Love, 35, 36
The Ideal Proposal is not Expressed in Words, 36, 37
Love is not Blind, 37
A Friend is He who Knows you are No Good, and is Willing to Forget It, 37
Marry in Faith and not in Hope, 38

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

LIFE AND DEATH—Continued
He who Refrains from Marriage is a Coward, 38
Hope and Faith, 38, 39
The Wife, 39, 40
Choice in Marriage, 40, 41
The "High Passion" is not often the Cause of Marriage, 42
The Modern Marriage Idyll is often Writ in Common Prose, 42–44
The Lion of Love is hardly a fit Animal for the Domestic Pet, 44
Marriage, 45
Marriage—its Advantages, 45
its Speculative Character, 46, 47 its Beneficent Effects, 49 its Commonplaceness, 49, 50 to Women it is Enlarging, 50, 51
its Experience Chastening, 51
Our Presumption in Marrying, 47, 48
A Wife is the Witness of your Life and the Sharpest Critic of your Conduct and Character. She is the Domestic Recording Angel, 52, 53

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Contents

LIFE AND DEATH—Continued
Respectability, 53
Our Boyhood, 54
Poverty and Morality, 54, 55
Letter from Home, 55, 56
The Dreams by the Fireside, 56
Happiness is Found in Social Life, 56, 57
We Value what we Pay for, 57
The Blind Bow-boy, 57, 58
The Price we Pay for what we Want is what we Call Life—we Pay the Price of Money in Liberty, 58, 59
Satisfy the Opportunities you Have before Looking for New Opportunities, 59
"Making Believe" in Child's Play, 60–65
Realism in Children, 65–67
Apology for Idleness, 67–69
Invalidism, Premature Old Age, 69–72
The Invalid and His Joys, 72–75
The Pleasures of Convalescence, 75–77
Railway Travel, 77–79
Ever Walk in Hope even though there be no Goal to Reach, 79
The True Love Story begins with Marriage, Courtship is the Prologue, 80

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

LIFE AND DEATH — Continued
Lies and Lying, 81, 82
Silence — a Method of Lying, 82, 83
The True Veracity is Truth in the Spirit, not Truth to the Letter, 83
Talk, 84–86
Natural Talk a Festival of Ostentation, 86–92
The Mother and Child Must Part, 93
Silence in Speech, 94, 95
Courage in Life, 95
The Value of Time, 95
Rest after Death, 96
Telling the Truth, 96–98
Travel, 98
We are all Travellers, 99
Rest after a Tramp, 99–101
Pleasure Trips in the Land of Thought and among the Hills of Vanity; Dwelling with Happiness, 101–104
Bivouacs, the Halts of Life, 104–106
A Walking Tour, 106–110
The Place of Money in Life, 110, 111
The Thief and the Soldier, 111, 112
Putting Questions, 112

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

LIFE AND DEATH—Continued
All Opinion Stages on the Road to Truth, 112, 113
Opinion is the Tavern by the Way in which we Dwell a little while on our Way to Truth, 114–116
Woman's Self-Sufficiency, 116, 117
Man's Dependence, 117, 118
Representative Men and their Works, 118, 119
Society's Laws Affect even Dogs, 119–121
A Wife is but a Woman; a Being of like Frailties as is the Man, 121–123
Aspiration, 123–125
CHARACTER
Success out of Failure, 129–134
The Selfishness of Youth, 134–136
The Old Adam, 136, 137
Indiscretions of Youth, 137, 138
It Requires Brains to make a Fool of Yourself, 138
Be not too Wise in your own Esteem, 139
Lack of Prudence in Great Men, 139–141
Hurry, 141
Jealousy, 142, 143

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

CHARACTER—Continued
Modesty in Deeds, 143
Human Endurance, 143, 144
Individuality, 144, 145
Tranquillity of Mind, 145
Good Traits in Character, 145
Gratitude, 146
The Self-made Man, 146
Saying "No" and "Yes," 146
RELIGION
The Sabbath, 149
Change of Creed, 149, 150
Pan's Pipes, 150–158
Our Divine Unrest, 158, 159
Prayer, 159
ART
The Actor as Artist, 163, 164
Style, 164, 165
Cathedrals, 166, 167
Choice of Words in Writing, 167–169
LITERATURE
Whitman's "Leaves of Grass," 173, 174
Meredith's "The Egoist," 174, 175
Wordsworth, 175, 176
Plays and Romances, 176

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Contents

LITERATURE—Continued
The Play, 176–178
The Romance, 178–180
Marcus Aurelius, 180
The Poetry of Despair, 181, 182
Ignorance is better than that Knowledge which Brings Sadness, 182, 183
Advice to the Young Writer, 183–185
Romance the Realization of the Ideal Laws of the Day-Dream, 185–187
The Quality of Romance, 187–190
Books are Letters to the Author's Friends, 190
Dumas's D'Artagnan, 190–192
The Truth in Literature is Essential, 192–194
The Duties of the Writer as Story-Teller, 194–198
NATURE
A River, 201
Woods and Forests, 201, 202
Forest and Ocean, 202, 203
Sleep in the Open Air at Night, 203–206
The Genius of Place and Time, 206–209
The Forest as Comforter, 209–211

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

EDUCATION
The Choice of Literature as a Profession, 215–219
Knowledge, 219–221
The Wisdom of the Idler, 221, 222
Books not Everything, 222, 223
Idleness, 223
Education in the School and in the Street, 224
Playing Truant, 224–226
The Gift of Reading, 226–228
Education of Boys and Girls, 228. Often nothing but a System of Catchwords and Formulæ, 228, 229
The Gift of Speech, 229–231
The Art of Speaking Well, 231–234
The Art of the Orator, 234, 235
Logic, 235, 236
MEN AND WOMEN
Grave-diggers, 239–242
The Talk of the Aged, 242–244
The Aged as Listeners, 244–246
Women as Talkers and Listeners, 246–249
France and England, 249, 250

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

MEN AND WOMEN — Continued
Woman's Value as a Teacher shows most in Married Life, 250, 251
French Independence, 251, 252
The Aged as Teachers, 252–254
Englishman's Pride and Ignorance, 254–256

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Editor's Note

THE charm and the beauty of Stevenson's writings compel our homage at all times. In this small selection it is hoped that neither of these qualities has been lost, but, on the contrary, the fine grace of thought and the clear insight into men and things so stand revealed that they shall appeal to the reader and invite him to a fuller study of the works of one of the greatest prose writers of the last century.

T. S.

Digitized by Google

Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Digitized by Google

Original from
HARVARD UNIVERSITY

I AM a kind of farthing dip,
Unfriendly to the nose and eye;
A blue-behinded ape, I skip
Upon the trees of Paradise.

At mankind's feet, I take my place
In solemn, sanctimonious state,
And have the air of saying grace
While I defile the dinner plate.

I am "the smiler with the knife,"
The battener upon garbage, I —
Dear Heaven, with such a rancid life,
Were it not better far to die?

Yet still, about the human pale,
I love to scamper, love to race,
To swing by my irreverent tail
All over the most holy place.

And when at length, some golden day,
The unfailing sportsman, aiming at,
Shall bag, me — all the world shall say:
Thank God, and there's an end of that!

Underwoods.

R. L. S.
A Portrait

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Digitized by Google

Original from
HARVARD UNIVERSITY

LIFE AND DEATH.

Digitized by Google

Original from
HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Digitized by Google

Original from
HARVARD UNIVERSITY

IT is customary to say that age should be considered, because it comes last. It seems just as much to the point, that youth comes first. And the scale fairly kicks the beam, if you go on to add that age, in a majority of cases, never comes at all. Disease and accident make short work of even the most prosperous persons; death costs nothing, and the expense of a headstone is an inconsiderable trifle to the happy heir. To be suddenly snuffed out in the middle of ambitious schemes is tragical enough at the best; bút when a man has been grudging himself his own life in the meanwhile, and saving up everything for the festival that was never to be, it becomes that hysterically moving sort of tragedy which lies on the confines of farce. The victim is dead — and he has cunningly overreached himself; a combination of calamities none the less absurd for being grim. To husband a favourite claret until the batch turns sour is not at all an artful stroke of policy; and how much more with a whole cellar — a whole bodily existence! People may lay down their lives with cheerfulness

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Preserve the Quality of Youth

in the sure expectation of a blessed mortality; but that is a different affair from giving up youth with all its admirable pleasures, in the hope of a better quality of gruel in a more than problematic, nay, more than improbable, old age. We should not compliment a hungry man, who should refuse a whole dinner and reserve all his appetite for the dessert, before he knew whether there was to be any dessert or not. If there be such a thing as imprudence in the world, we surely have it here. We sail in leaky bottoms and on great and perilous waters; and to take a cue from the dolorous old naval ballad, we have heard the mermaids singing, and know that we shall never see dry land any more. Old and young, we are all on our last cruise. If there is a fill of tobacco among the crew, for God's sake pass it round, and let us have a pipe before we go! Virginibus Puerisque. Crabbed Age and Youth.

Truth of Intercourse

IT takes," says Thoreau, in the noblest and most useful passage I remember to have read in any modern author, "two to speak truth — one to speak and another to hear." He must be very little experienced, or have no great zeal for truth, who does not recognise the fact. A grain of anger or a grain of suspicion produces strange acoustical effects, and makes the ear greedy to remark offence. Hence we find those who have once quarrelled carry themselves distantly, and are ever ready to break the truce. To speak truth there must be moral equality or else no respect; and hence between parent and child intercourse is apt to degenerate into a verbal fencing bout, and misapprehensions to become ingrained. And there is another side to this, for the parent begins with an imperfect notion of the child's character, formed in early years or during the equinoctial gales of youth; to this he adheres, noting only the facts which suit with his preconception; and wherever a person fancies himself unjustly judged, he at once and finally gives up the effort to speak truth. With our chosen friends, on the other hand, and still more between lovers (for mutual understanding is love's essence), the truth is easily indicated by the one and aptly comprehended by the other.

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Between Friends

Between Parent and Child

Between Lovers

Digitized by Google

Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Between Man and Wife	A hint taken, a look understood, conveys the gist of long and delicate explanations; and where the life is known, even yea and nay become luminous. In the closest of all relations — that of a love well-founded and equally shared — speech is half discarded, like a roundabout infantile process or a ceremony of formal etiquette; and the two communicate directly by their presences, and with few looks and fewer words contrive to share their good and evil and uphold each other's hearts in joy. For love rests upon a physical basis; it is a familiarity of nature's making and apart from voluntary choice. Understanding has in some sort outrun knowledge, for the affection perhaps began with the acquaintance; and as it was not made like other relations, so it is not, like them, to be perturbed or clouded. Each knows more than can be uttered; each lives by faith, and believes by a natural compulsion; and between man and wife the language of the body is largely developed and grown strangely eloquent. The thought that prompted and was conveyed in a caress would only lose to be set down in words — ay, although Shakespeare himself should be the scribe.

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Yet it is in these dear intimacies, beyond all others, that we must strive and do battle for the truth. Let but a doubt arise, and alas! all the previous intimacy and confidence is but another charge against the person doubted. "What a monstrous dishonesty is this if I have been deceived so long and so completely!" Let but that thought gain entrance, and you plead before a deaf tribunal. Appeal to the past; why, that is your crime! Make all clear, convince the reason; alas! speciousness is but a proof against you. "If you can abuse me now, the more likely that you have abused me from the first."

For a strong affection such moments are worth supporting, and they will end well; for your advocate is in your lover's heart and speaks her own language; it is not you, but she herself, who can defend and clear you of the charge. But in slighter intimacies, and for a less stringent union? Indeed, is it worth while? We are all incompris, only more or less concerned for the mischance; all trying

Deceit.

Digitized by Google

Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

wrongly to do right; all fawning at each other's feet like dumb, neglected lap-dogs. Sometimes we catch an eye — this is our opportunity in the ages — and we wag our tail with a poor smile. "Is that all!" All? If you only knew! But how can they know? They do not love us; the more fools we to squander like on the indifferent.

But the morality of the thing, you will be glad to hear, is excellent; for it is only by trying to understand others that we can get our own hearts understood; and in matters of human feeling the clement judge is the most successful pleader. Virginibus Puerisque. IV.

Falling in Love

THIS simple accident of falling in love is as beneficial as it is astonishing. It arrests the petrifying influence of years, disproves cold-blooded and cynical conclusions, and awakens dormant sensibilities. Hitherto the man had found it a good policy to disbelieve the existence of any enjoyment which was out of his reach; and thus he turned his back upon the strong, sunny parts of nature, and accustomed himself to look exclusively

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

on what was common and dull. He accepted a prose ideal, let himself go blind of many sympathies by disuse; and if he were young and witty, or beautiful, wilfully forewent these advantages. He joined himself to the following of what, in the old mythology of love, was prettily called nonchaloir; and in an odd mixture of feelings, a fling of self-respect, a preference of selfish liberty, and a great dash of that fear with which honest people regard serious interests, kept himself back from the straightforward course of life, among certain selected activities. And now, all of a sudden, he is unhorsed, like St. Paul, from his infidel affectation. His heart, which has been ticking accurate seconds for the last year, gives a bound and begins to beat high and irregularly in his breast. It seems as if he had never heard or felt or seen until that moment; and by the report of his memory, he must have lived his past life between sleep and waking, or with the preoccupied attention of a brown study. He is practically incommoded by the generosity of his feelings, smiles much when he is alone, and develops a habit of looking rather blankly upon the moon and stars. . . . If the root of the matter be in him, and if he has the requisite chords to set in vibration, a young man may occasionally enter, with the key of art, into that land of Beulah which is upon the borders of Heaven and within sight of the City of Love. There let him sit awhile to hatch delightful hopes and perilous illusions.

Digitized by Google

Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Love Brings with it the Highest Sense of the Pleasure of Living

One thing that accompanies the passion in its first blush is certainly difficult to explain. It comes (I do not see how) that from having a very supreme sense of pleasure in all parts of life — in lying down to sleep, in waking, in motion, in breathing, in continuing to be — the lover begins to regard his happiness as beneficial for the rest of the world and highly meritorious in himself. Our race has never been able contentedly to suppose that the noise of its wars, conducted by a few young gentlemen in a corner of an inconsiderable star, does not reëcho among the courts of Heaven with quite a formidable effect. In much the same taste, when people find a great to-do in their own breasts, they

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

imagine it must have some influence in their neighbourhood. The presence of the two lovers is so enchanting to each other that it seems as if it must be the best thing possible for everybody else. They are half inclined to fancy it is because of them and their love that the sky is blue and the sun shines. And certainly the weather is usually fine while people are courting. . . . In point of fact, although the happy man feels very kindly towards others of his own sex, there is apt to be something too much of the magnifico in his demeanour. If people grow presuming and self-important over such matters as a dukedom or the Holy See, they will scarcely support the dizziest elevation in life without some suspicion of a strut; and the dizziest elevation is to love and be loved in return. Consequently, accepted lovers are a trifle condescending in their address to other men. An overweening sense of the passion and importance of life hardly conduces to simplicity of manner. To women, they feel very nobly, very purely, and very generously, as if they were so many Joan of Arcs; but this does not come out in their behaviour; and they treat them to Grandisonian airs marked with a suspicion of fatuity. Virginibus Puerisque. III.

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Sweethearts

CERTAINLY, whatever it may be with regard to the world at large, this idea of beneficent pleasure is true as between the sweethearts. To do good and communicate is the lover's grand intention. It is the happiness of the other that makes his own most intense gratification. It is not possible to entangle the different emotions, the pride, humility, pity and passion, which are excited by a look of happy love or an unexpected caress. To make one's self beautiful, to dress the hair, to excel in talk, to do anything and all things that puff out the character and attributes and make them imposing in the eyes of others, is not only to magnify one's self, but to offer the most delicate homage at the same time. And it is in this latter intention that they are done by lovers; for the essence of love is kindness; and indeed it may be best defined as passionate kindness; kindness, so to speak, run mad and become

Love's Essence is Kindness

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

importunate and violent. Vanity in a merely personal sense exists no longer. The lover takes a perilous pleasure in privately displaying his weak points and having them, one after another, accepted and condoned. He wishes to be assured that he is loved not for this or that good quality, but for himself, or something as like himself as he can contrive to set forward. For, although it may have been a very difficult thing to paint the Marriage of Cana, or write the fourth act of Antony and Cleopatra, there is a more difficult piece of art before every one in this world who cares to set about explaining his own character to others. Words and acts are easily wrenched from their true significance; and they are all the language we have to come and go upon. A pitiful job we make of it, as a rule. For better or worse, people mistake our meaning and take our emotions at a wrong valuation. And generally we rest pretty content with our failures; we are content to be misapprehended by cackling flirts; but when once a man is moonstruck with this affection of love, he makes it a point of honour

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

to clear such dubieties away. He cannot have the Best of her Sex misled upon a point of this importance; and his pride revolts at being loved in a mistake.

He discovers a great reluctance to return on former periods of his life. To all that has not been shared with her, rights and duties, by-gone fortunes and dispositions, he can look back only by a difficult and repugnant effort of the will. That he should have wasted some years in ignorance of what alone was really important, that he may have entertained the thought of other women with any show of complacency, is a burthen almost too heavy for his self-respect. But it is the thought of another past that rankles in his spirit like a poisoned wound. That he himself made a fashion of being alive in the bald, beggarly days before a certain meeting, is deplorable enough in all good conscience. But that She should have permitted herself the same liberty seems inconsistent with a Divine Providence.

Virginibus Puerisque. III.

Digitized by Google

Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

THE changes wrought by death are in themselves so sharp and final, and so terrible and melancholy in their consequences, that the thing stands alone in man's experience, and has no parallel upon earth. It outdoes all other accidents because it is the last of them. Sometimes it leaps suddenly upon its victims, like a Thug; sometimes it lays a regular siege and creeps upon their citadel during a score of years. And when the business is done, there is sore havoc made in other people's lives, and a pin knocked out by which many subsidiary friendships hung together. There are empty chairs, solitary walks, and single beds at night. Again, in taking away our friends, death does not take them away utterly, but leaves behind a mocking, tragical, and soon intolerable residue, which must be hurriedly concealed. Hence a whole chapter of sights and customs striking to the mind, from the pyramids of Egypt to the gibbets and dule trees of mediæval Europe. The poorest persons have a bit of pageant going towards the tomb; memorial stones are set up over the least memorable; and, in order to preserve some show of respect for what remains of our old loves and friendships, we must accompany it with much grimly ludicrous ceremonial, and the hired undertaker parades before the door. All this, and much more of the same sort, accompanied by the eloquence of poets, has gone a great way to put humanity in error; nay, in many philosophies the error has been embodied and laid down with every circumstance of logic; although in real life the bustle and swiftness, in leaving people little time to think, have not left them time enough to go dangerously wrong in practice.

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Virginibus Puerisque. Aes Triplex.

—+—

Our Lives are Bound Tenderly to Life through Friendship

LASTLY, he is bound tenderly to life by the thought of his friends; or, shall we not say rather, that by their thought for him, by their unchangeable solicitude and love, he remains woven into the very stuff of life, beyond the power of bodily dissolution to undo? In a thousand ways will he survive and be perpetuated. Much of Etienne de la Boetie survived during all the years in which

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Montaigne continued to converse with him on the pages of the ever-delightful essays. Much of what was truly Goethe was dead already when he revisited places that knew him no more, and found no better consolation than the promise of his own verses, that soon he too would be at rest. Indeed, when we think of what it is that we most seek and cherish, and find most pride and pleasure in calling ours, it will sometimes seem to us as if our friends, at our decease, would suffer loss more truly than ourselves. As a monarch who should care more for the outlying colonies he knows on the map, or through the report of his vicegerents, than for the trunk of his empire under his eyes at home, are we not more concerned about the shadowy life that we have in the hearts of others, and that portion in their thought and fancies which, in a certain far-away sense, belongs to us, than about the real knot of our identity — that central metropolis of self, of which alone we are immediately aware — or the diligent service of arteries and veins and infinitesimal activity of ganglia, which we know (as we know a proposition in Euclid) to be the source and substance of the whole? At the death of every one whom we love, some fair and honourable portion of our existence falls away, and we are dislodged from one of these dear provinces; and they are not, perhaps, the most fortunate who survive a long series of such impoverishments, till their life and influence narrow gradually into the meagre limit of their own spirits, and death, when he comes at last, can destroy them at one blow.

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Virginibus Puerisque. Ordered South.

—++—

Honesty in Business

THE salary in any business under heaven is not the only, nor indeed the first, question. That you should continue to exist is a matter for your own consideration; but that your business should be first honest, and second useful, are points in which honour and morality are concerned. Profession of Letters.

—++—

Busyness a Symptom of Deficient Vitality

EXTREME busyness, whether at school or college, kirk or market, is a symptom of deficient vitality; and a faculty for idleness implies a catholic appetite and strong sense

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

of personal identity. There is a sort of dead-alive, hackneyed people about, who are scarcely conscious of living except in the exercise of some conventional occupation. Bring these fellows into the country, or set them aboard ship, and you will see how they pine for their desk or their study. They have no curiosity; they cannot give themselves over to random provocations; they do not take pleasure in the exercise of their faculties for its own sake; and unless Necessity lays about them with a stick, they will even stand still. It is no good speaking to such folk; they cannot be idle, their nature is not generous enough; and they pass those hours in a sort of coma which are not dedicated to furious moiling in the gold-mill. When they do not require to go to the office, when they are not hungry and have no mind to drink, the whole breathing world is a blank to them. If they have to wait an hour or so for a train, they fall into a stupid trance with their eyes open. To see them, you would suppose there was nothing to look at and no one to speak with; you would imagine they were paralysed or

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

alienated; and yet very possibly they are hard workers in their way, and have good eyesight for a flaw in a deed or a turn of the market. They have been to school and college, but all the time they had their eye on the medal; they have gone about in the world and mixed with clever people, but all the time they were thinking of their own affairs. As if a man's soul were not too small to begin with, they have dwarfed and narrowed theirs by a life of all work and no play; until here they are at forty, with a listless attention, a mind vacant of all material of amusement, and not one thought to rub against another, while they wait for the train. Before he was breeched, he might have clambered on the boxes; when he was twenty, he would have stared at the girls; but now the pipe is smoked out, the snuff-box empty, and my gentleman sits bolt upright upon a bench, with lamentable eyes. This does not appear to me as being Success in Life. But it is not only the person himself who suffers from his busy habits, but his wife and children, his friends and relations, and down to the very people he sits with in a railway carriage or an omnibus. Perpetual devotion to what a man calls his business is only to be sustained by perpetual neglect of many other things. And it is not by any means certain that a man's business is the most important thing he has to do. To an impartial estimate it will seem clear that many of the wisest, most virtuous, and most beneficent parts that are to be played upon the Theatre of Life are filled by gratuitous performers, and pass among the world at large as phases of idleness. For in that theatre, not only the walking gentlemen, singing chambermaids, and diligent fiddlers in the orchestra, but those who look on and clap their hands from the benches, do really play a part and fulfil important offices towards the general result.

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Virginibus Puerisque. Apology for Idlers.

—+—

THIS world itself, travelling blindly and swiftly in over-crowded space, among a million other worlds travelling blindly and swiftly in contrary directions, may very well come by a knock that would set it into ex-

Our Healthy Indifference to Death

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

plosion like a penny squib. And what, pathologically looked at, is the human body, with all its organs, but a mere bagful of petards? The least of these is as dangerous to the whole economy as the ship's powder-magazine to the ship; and with every breath we breathe, and every meal we eat, we are putting one or more of them in peril. If we clung as devotedly as some philosophers pretend we do to the abstract idea of life, or were half as frightened as they make out we are, for the subversive accident that ends it all, the trumpets might sound by the hour and no one would follow them into battle — the blue-peter might fly at the truck, but who would climb into a sea-going ship? Think (if these philosophers were right) with what a preparation of spirit we should affront the daily peril of the dinner-table; a deadlier spot than any battlefield in history, where the far greater proportion of our ancestors have miserably left their bones! What woman would ever be lured into marriage, so much more dangerous than the wildest sea? And what would it be to grow old? For, after a certain distance, every step we take in life we find the ice growing thinner under our feet, and all around us and behind us we see our contemporaries going through. By the time a man gets well into the seventies, his continued existence is a mere miracle; and when he lays his old bones in bed for the night, there is an overwhelming probability that he will never see the day. Do the old men mind it, as a matter of fact? Why, no. They were never merrier; they have their grog at night, and tell the raciest stories; they hear of the death of people about their own age, or even younger, not as if it was a grisly warning, but with a simple childlike pleasure at having outlived some one else; and when a draught might puff them out like a guttering candle, or a bit of a stumble shatter them like so much glass, their old hearts keep sound and unaffrighted, and they go on, bubbling with laughter, through years of man's age compared to which the valley at Balaklava was as safe and peaceful as a village cricket-green on Sunday. It may fairly be questioned (if we look to the peril only) whether it was a much more daring feat for Curtius to plunge

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

The Last Thing a Brave Man Thinks of is Death

Digitized by Google

Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

into the gulf, than for any old gentleman of ninety to doff his clothes and clamber into bed.

Indeed, it is a memorable subject for consideration, with what unconcern and gaiety mankind pricks on along the Valley of the Shadow of Death. The whole way is one wilderness of snares, and the end of it, for those who fear the last pinch, is irrevocable ruin. And yet we go spinning through it all, like a party for the Derby. Perhaps the reader remembers one of the humorous devices of the deified Caligula; how he encouraged a vast concourse of holiday-makers on to his bridge over Baiæ Bay; and when they were in the height of their enjoyment, turned loose the Prætorian guards among the company, and had them tossed into the sea. This is no bad miniature of the dealings of nature with the transitory race of man. Only, what a checquered picnic we have of it, even while it lasts! and into what great waters, not to be crossed by any swimmer, God's pale Prætorian throws us over in the end!

We live the time that a match flickers; we

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

pop the cork of a ginger-beer bottle, and the earthquake swallows us on the instant. Is it not odd, is it not incongruous, is it not, in the highest sense of human speech, incredible, that we should think so highly of the ginger-beer, and regard so little the devouring earthquake? The love of Life and the fear of Death are two famous phrases that grow harder to understand the more we think about them. It is a well-known fact that an immense proportion of boat accidents would never happen if people held the sheet in their hands instead of making it fast; and yet, unless it be some martinet of a professional mariner or some landsman with shattered nerves, every one of God's creatures makes it fast. A strange instance of man's unconcern and brazen boldness in the face of death!

Virginibus Puerisque. Aes Triplex.

—++—

WE do not go to cowards for tender dealing; there is nothing so cruel as panic; the man who has least fear for his own carcase, has most time to consider others. That eminent chemist who took his walks abroad

To be Over-wise is to Ossify

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Prudence is Death to Generosity

in tin shoes, and subsisted wholly upon tepid milk, had all his work cut out for him in considerate dealings with his own digestion. So soon as prudence has begun to grow up in the brain, like a dismal fungus, it finds its first expression in a paralysis of generous acts. The victim begins to shrink spiritually; he develops a fancy for parlours with a regulated temperature, and takes his morality on the principle of tin shoes and tepid milk. The care of one important body or soul becomes so engrossing, that all the noises of the outer world begin to come thin and faint into the parlour with the regulated temperature; and the tin shoes go equably forward over blood and rain. To be overwise is to ossify; and the scruple-monger ends by standing stock-still.

The True Lover of Living

Now the man who has his heart on his sleeve, and a good whirling weathercock of a brain, who reckons his life as a thing to be dashingly used and cheerfully hazarded, makes a very different acquaintance of the world, keeps all his pulses going true and fast, and gathers impetus as he runs, until, if he be running towards anything better than wildfire, he

Digitized by Google
Original from HARVARD UNIVERSITY