The Robbins bequest includes holdings in all aspects of Middle English literature, with supplemental materials in the fields of Old English, Anglo-Norman and French literatures, medieval history, philosophy, theology, and manuscript studies. Appraised at $700,000, the library contains at present about 10,000 volumes and subscribes to 40 specialized periodicals. The collection also contains some 5,000 offprints. In addition to donating the collection, Robbins and his wife have made provisions for new acquisitions and have established a trust of $160,000 for a fellowship program. The annual Helen Ann Mins Robbins Fellowship, to be inaugurated in two years, will support a female pre-doctoral student for a year's research in medieval studies at the University. The recipient will be chosen from an international competition. Robbins, a fellow of the Royal Society of Literature, holds a doctorate from Emmanuel College, Cambridge. He has published a dozen books and more than 200 articles and is an international authority in Middle English studies and a specialist in the history of witchcraft. ■■

Just the facts, ma'am

A recent incident at the Columbia University Libraries was reported to ALA's Office for Intellectual Freedom by Paula Kaufman, director of Columbia's Academic Information Services Group. Whether this was an isolated occurrence or is indicative of a nationwide effort by the FBI to monitor library use is unknown. In any case it is a reminder that the patron's right to privacy is not taken for granted by all elements of our society. Paula Kaufman's letter is reprinted here with her permission.

"On June 4, two FBI agents went into our Math/Science Library and began to question the clerk on duty about the use of the Math/Science Library by foreigners. One of our librarians overheard the conversation, stopped the agents, and told them they would have to talk to me.

"An FBI Special Agent called me on June 5 and made an appointment to talk with me the following Monday. She and a colleague came to my office on Monday morning. They explained that they were doing a general 'library awareness' program in the City and that they were asking librarians to be alert to the use of their libraries by persons from countries 'hostile to the United States, such as the Soviet Union' and to provide the FBI with information about these activities.

"I explained that we were not prepared to cooperate with them in any way, described our philosophies and policies respecting privacy, confidentiality, and academic freedom, and told them they were not welcome here. They asked a few questions about our arrangements to accommodate the use of the Libraries by visiting scholars and I provided them with the publicly available information about our procedures. After I repeated that we would not cooperate with them in their program, they left. They did not try to persuade me to change my mind."

The ALA Office for Intellectual Freedom would like to know whether any similar incidents have taken place in other academic libraries.

Library support for academic administration

Is your library regularly providing any form of organized, direct information support for your senior campus administrators? Rebecca Kellogg (University of Arizona) and Peter Watson (Idaho State University) are investigating the issues and procedures involved in having an academic library offer such a service. They are interested in hearing from any libraries with experience in meeting the information needs of academic administrators via a formal service that utilizes the library's resources and personnel. Please contact: Peter Watson, University Librarian, Eli M. Oboler Library, Idaho State University, Pocatello, ID 83209-0009.

Historically black institutions

The Andrew Mellon Foundation has provided $22,000 for a planning grant to allow ACRL to consider the problems of libraries in historically black colleges and universities (HBCU's) and plan some appropriate activity to help those libraries. Beverly Lynch, university librarian at the University of Illinois at Chicago, is chair of an ad hoc committee that will carry out this planning process.

Commenting on the grant, ACRL President Joanne Euster said, "ACRL's strategic plan made a commitment to helping the historically black colleges and universities. The generosity of the Mellon Foundation will help us to plan carefully for a project that can truly be of assistance."

To gather information about these libraries, ACRL will convene librarians from 30 representative institutions in Atlanta on October 18-20. They will include public and private schools, larger and smaller institutions, and those from different states.

In addition to that meeting, the ad hoc committee is seeking information from anyone else interested in the project. Please communicate your ideas and opinions about ways ACRL might help to: ACRL/HBCU Project, 50 E. Huron St., Chicago, IL 60611.

Using ideas and information gathered from these various sources, the committee will draft a proposal and seek funding for a more extensive project of assistance.

ception in 1965 and specialized in library services to the financially and culturally deprived, prison inmates, the elderly and other minority groups.

STEPHAN FULLER, head of cataloging services in the Hilles and Lamont Libraries of Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts, died July 30 at 34. Fuller joined the staff in 1978, working in the Monographic Cataloging Support Service in the Office for Systems Planning and Research and in the Kennedy School of Government Library. He was a graduate of the University of Nebraska with a bachelor's degree in music education, and, upon earning his MLS from Simmons College in 1979, was appointed music librarian in the Hilles Library. In 1983 Fuller was appointed head of cataloging services in Hilles and Lamont, where he oversaw the beginning of an ongoing retroconversion project. He also participated in several task forces and advisory groups.

GLADYS F. PRATT, retired librarian at Framingham State College, Massachusetts, died November 18, 1986, at 94. She had been retired since 1957. A 1914 graduate of Mount Holyoke College, Pratt worked in the library there from 1914 to 1917; at the Smithsonian Institution from 1917 to 1920; at the Women's College of Delaware from 1920 to 1922; and at the University of Illinois during 1923-1924. She earned a master's degree from Illinois in 1931 and took graduate courses at George Washington University and Boston University. From 1924 to 1939 she was librarian at Westfield State College and joined the staff at Framingham State in 1941. Pratt also taught at the University of Virginia, at the University of Iowa's summer library school, and at Westfield and Framingham.

FRANK B. SESSA, professor emeritus of the School of Library and Information Science at the University of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, died July 24 in Orlando, Florida. A member of the SLIS faculty from 1966 to 1980, Sessa was acting dean (1971-1973) and chairperson of the Department of Library Science (1973-1976). He had also been chairperson of the Committee on Doctoral Studies and director of the Bureau of Urban Research. Prior to joining the staff at Pittsburgh, Sessa spent 15 years as director of the Miami, Florida, Public Library and, earlier, had been on both the history and library faculties of the University of Miami. He received bachelor's, master's, and doctoral degrees in history from Pittsburgh and was a distinguished graduate of the Carnegie Library School.

Sessa served ALA as treasurer and as a member of the Executive Board and the Executive Council, was president of the Florida Library Association and the Florida Historical Association, and a member and chairperson of numerous committees of these and other associations. He was also president and, from 1975 to 1977, executive secretary of the Beta Phi Mu honor society, and was widely known as a consultant in library service, operation and construction. ■ ■
