

Following the scheduled completion of data entry in 1986, a descriptive and historical guide to West Virginia newspapers will be published.

News notes

•Tufts University's Bernstein Audiovisual Center, Medford, Massachusetts, a modern facility for the Wessell Library's growing collection of films, videotapes, slides, and related materials, was dedicated November 8. The Center was made possible by a major gift from Boston residents David and Irene Bernstein. The complex includes two viewing rooms, each equipped for videotape, film, or slides; a multi-purpose projection room serving both viewing facilities; individual video or slide viewing areas; a smaller viewing room seating 10; and a storage area.

•Wheaton College, Norton, Massachusetts, has dedicated and named its library in honor of Madeleine Clark Wallace, Class of 1934, who provided the largest single endowment the College has ever received from an alumna. Her gift fulfilled the Sesquicentennial Campaign goal of providing a collection development endowment for the library. ■■

Profiles

BRIAN AVENEY has announced the opening of The Information Works, El Granada, California, to offer consulting services to libraries and the information industry. He was most recently director for research and development at Blackwell North America where he worked on establishing electronic linkages between Blackwell and the WLN, UTLAS, OCLC, and other automated acquisitions systems.

Brian Aveney

Aveney has worked in library and automation systems since 1967 at the Library of Congress, Harvard, the University of Pennsylvania, and Berkeley. He has also taught library science and automation at Harvard, Rutgers, Berkeley, San Jose State, and the University of Oregon.

He has also been appointed editor of Information Publishing, a new electronic journal to be published by Information Access Company and available on DIALOG this month. He edited Information Technology and Libraries for ALA's Library Information and Technology Association from 1981 to 1983, is a consulting editor of EPB: Electronic Publishing and Bookselling, and is a member of the editorial board of Library Hi Tech.

Aveney currently serves on the ALA Task Force on Bibliographic Databases which is examining the question of copyright of library cataloging records.

SHERRILYNNE FULLER has been appointed director of the Bio-Medical Library of the University of Minnesota, Minneapolis. For the past six years Fuller has been serving as associate director of the Norris Medical Library at the University of Southern California.

Sherrilynne Fuller

Prior to that she was head of public services and head of reference at Norris. In 1972-1974 Fuller was an information analyst at the Brain Information Service of the University of California, Los Angeles. Since 1981 she has also been lecturer in the USC School of Library and Information Management. Her other positions have included public and technical services responsibilities at the Penrose Public Library, Colorado Springs, and the Loussac Public Library, Anchorage.

Fuller received a bachelor's degree in biology and an MLS at Indiana University, Bloomington. In the Spring of 1984 she was awarded a doctorate in library and information management at the University of Southern California.

Her professional activities have included membership on the Board of Directors of the Bio-Medical Communications Network, the On-Line Reference Services Advisory Committee of the California Library Authority for Systems and Services (CLASS), the National Program Committee of the Medical Library Association (1982), the Forum Coordinating Committee of the California Library Association (1981), and the Medicine Special Interest Group of the American Society for Information Science.

SIDNEY F. HUTTNER has been appointed head of special collections at the University of Tulsa's McFarlin Library, effective November 1. Prior to this appointment he and his wife operated their Stege Press and Bindery in Charlottesville, Virginia. From 1980 to 1982 he was head of the George Arents Research Library for Special Collections at Syracuse University and from 1970 to 1980 assistant head of special collections at the University of Chicago.

Huttner has written about city directories and is currently editing a register of artists, engravers, booksellers, bookbinders, printers and publishers in New York City for the years 1821-1842. Compiled from city directories the work includes the names of about 5,000 artists and craftsmen and some 50,000 addresses associated with them.

A hand bookbinder with a strong interest in the conservation of books and paper, Huttner is a member of the American Institute of Conservation, the Institute of Paper Conservation, and the Designer Bookbinders. He holds a master's degree in philosophy from the University of Chicago. As a member of the ACRL Rare Books and Manuscripts Section, he helped draft a version of guidelines for the transfer of rare materials from general collections to special collections.

WENDY P. LOUGEE has been appointed head of the University of Michigan's Harlan Hatcher Graduate Library, Ann Arbor, effective November 15. She will coordinate the operation of the public service units in the Graduate Library.

She had been serving as assistant to the director since 1982. Her responsibilities included research on current library communications, planning, systems policies, budget development and review, collection management data analysis, and fundraising. In addition Lougee assisted in the development of grant and special project proposals and served as RLG coordinator.

Lougee received her bachelor's degree in English at Lawrence University, Appleton, Wisconsin, and earned an MLS at the University of Wisconsin,

Wendy P. Lougee

Madison, in 1973. She also holds a master's degree in psychology from the University of Minnesota (1977).

Before coming to Michigan, Lougee was reference/collection development librarian at Brown University from 1978 to 1982. She was also liaison to the departments of economics, education, linguistics, political science, psychology, and sociology. She has served as reference librarian at Wheaton College (1977-1978), and as a special project associate for the Florence Goodenough Reference Library at the University of Minnesota.

A former member of the College & Research Libraries Editorial Board, Lougee now holds appointments on the ACRL Copyright Committee and the RASD Nonbibliographic Databases and Data Files Committee.
