Deaths

LUCILE KELLING HENDERSON, former dean of the School of Information and Library Science at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, died July 29. She was 95. Henderson was dean of the school from 1954 to 1960. She joined the UNC faculty in 1932 and retired in 1960. Henderson supervised the school's transition from a fifth-year bachelor of library science degree program to an MLS program. During her deanship, the Epsilon chapter of Beta Phi Mu, the national library science honor society, was chartered at UNC.

Henderson was one of the first teachers employed by the school, which was established in 1931. Before coming to UNC, the Minnesota native taught at the University of Southern California, Mills College, Columbia University, and New York State Teachers College. Henderson was the author of a dozen books and monographs, including Bernard Shaw Around the World and joint author of Index Verborum Iuvenalis. She also wrote numerous articles in professional magazines and many short stories. The former dean was a member of Phi Beta Kappa, the American Association of University Professors, American Philological Association, Association of American Library Schools, American Library Association, Southeastern Library Association and Shaw Society of America.

She received her bachelor of arts degree from Whitman College in 1917 and her bachelor of library science degree from New York State Library School in 1921.

Henderson was the widow of Archibald Henderson, former head of the UNC Department of Mathematics, an author, critic, scholar, and biographer of George Bernard Shaw.
