Librarians with disabilities

Are you a librarian, disabled, and interested in participating in a network of librarians and future librarians with disabilities? Do you know someone who fits that description? You or your colleague are invited to a planning meeting for such a network at the ALA Annual Conference in Dallas in 1989.

It is my perception that such a network is especially needed to provide support and guidance for librarians who work in isolated settings and for students with disabilities who are considering librarianship as a career. Your ideas for developing such a network are welcome. To be placed on the mailing list, contact: Linda Lucas, Professor, College of Library and Information Science, University of South Carolina, Columbia, SC 29208; (803) 777-3858.

His administrative experience in academic and public libraries encompasses sixteen years, and he has served as president of the Texas Library Association and as a member of ALA's By-laws Committee.

HERBERT FOERSTEL, head of branch libraries for the University of Maryland, College Park, has been honored with a Hugh M. Hefner First Amendment Award in the Education category for his vigilant efforts to maintain library patrons' basic rights of privacy and access to public information. An outspoken opponent of the FBI's Library Awareness Program, which asked librarians to reveal borrowers' records and to report suspicious foreign-speaking patrons to the FBI, Foerstel testified before the House Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights this year that the Program was a direct violation of the library profession's code of ethics as well as the library confidentiality laws of 37 states and the District of Columbia. Foerstel has also appeared on the TV programs "The MacNeil-Lehrer NewsHour," "Good Morning America," and "CBS This Morning" in defense of the privacy rights of library patrons.

the society's highest honor. The award, given to an individual who has made noteworthy contributions to the field of information science, was presented in Atlanta in late October. The society has also recognized Lancaster for his publications; two of his books were among the 74 titles listed in a recent article entitled "Significant Readings in Information Science: 1937-1987," which appeared in a special 50th anniversary edition of the Bulletin of the American Society for Information Science. Toward Paperless Information Systems and Information Retrieval On-line, co-authored with Emily Gallup Fayen, received the society's Best Information Science Book Award in 1979 and 1976, respectively. Retirements

DOROTHY WELLS, local documents librarian in the Public Affairs Service at the University of California, Los Angeles, retired at the end of September after 46 years of service. She began her association with the University as the librarian for the Bureau of Governmental Research (later named the Government and Public Affairs Reading Room). She held this position until 1971 when she was appointed to her position in local documents. Concurrent with these responsibilities, Wells served as the librarian for the John Randolph Haynes and Dora Haynes Foundation Collection from 1952 to 1980. The Library's strong collection of local documents, and other local and state historical materials, is a direct result of Wells's persistence in acquiring these elusive publications.

Deaths

A strong supporter of and contributor to the Council of Research and Academic Libraries (CORAL), she served as CORAL secretary in 1986-87 and had recently been elected as chair of the CORAL Online Users' Group. She was also instrumental in establishing the Universal City Public Library and volunteered many hours there.

MARIA GULYAS, a member of Stanford University's Law Library staff for 23 years, and head of collection management since 1975, died September 6. A native of Bratislava, Czechoslovakia, Gulyas and her late husband came to the United States in 1950 after the Russian invasion of Czechoslovakia. ■ ■
