Appointments

Kimberly Douglas has been named university librarian at the California Institute of Technology. She had served as acting director of the libraries since April 2003. A staff member in the Caltech Library System since 1988, Douglas first served as head of reader services. She then served as director of the Sherman Fairchild Library of Engineering and Applied Science and as head of technical information services. Douglas has been involved in designing and implementing automated library services. She introduced desktop publishing to the Caltech libraries, initiating their online presence in the early 1990s, and provided leadership in the design and implementation of Caltech's document delivery service, TOC/DOC. Douglas was instrumental in the planning and execution of the Sherman Fairchild Library of Engineering and Applied Science, which opened in 1997. She has published on a variety of topics, most recently on aspects of digital collections. Douglas has served on the IEEE Library Advisory Committee and is currently a member of the Visiting Committee for the Goddard Space Flight Center Library. She has been active in Library and Information Technology Association Interest Groups by helping to found, chair, and develop programs for the Interest Group on Electronic Publishing.
