Retirements

Rosann Bazirjian, dean of university libraries at University of North Carolina-

Greensboro (UNCG) for the past 11 years, has announced her retirement, effective April 1, 2016. Bazirjian first became dean in August 2004 when she came to UNCG from Penn State. Among her many accomplishments were the dramatic enhancement of the library's spaces; creation of new collaborative learning spaces, including the Learning Commons and Digital Media Commons; and renovated space for Special Collections and University Archives, Electronic Resources and Information Technology, and the Music Library. Bazirjian also has strong commitment to diversity, including the creation of the ACE Scholars Program, the naming of Gerald Holmes as diversity librarian, the creation of the Diversity Residency position, and the development of a strategic plan for diversity. Bazirjian was committed to making research broadly available to the scholarly community and to the public, which led her to secure membership for the University Libraries in leading professional associations working toward the goal of open access such as SPARC (Scholarly Publishing and Academic Resources Coalition) and CNI (Coalition for Networked Information).

Laine Farley, executive director of the California Digital Library (CDL) at the University of California, has retired after leading the CDL for nine years. As CDL's longest serving executive director, Farley presided over many of CDL's most significant accomplishments: expanding initiatives in library publishing and data management, developing policies and tools for UC's open access initiatives, overseeing the large scale digitization of University of California's (UC) library holdings in partnership with Google and the Internet Archive, and establishing UC libraries as founding members of the HathiTrust. 𝓷
