

MELANIE FIRTH

is a senior in the College of Arts & Sciences. A native of Malvern, Pennsylvania, Melanie has spent her time at BC as a History major, concentrating in eighteenth and nineteenth century American history. In the past year, however, she has decided to explore the arts and natural sciences as well. After graduation, Melanie plans to attend a post-baccalaureate pre-med program in order to prepare for medical school. She would like to thank the professor under whom she worked for this project, Lynn Lyerly, for all her guidance.

ALEAH FOX

is a senior from Groton, Connecticut, majoring in Biology with a minor in Computer Science. She has been working in Dr. Jeffy Chuang's computational biology laboratory for three years and was awarded the Undergraduate Diversity Scholarship by the Society of Molecular Biology and Evolution, which enabled her to attend a conference and present her research during the summer of 2007. Aleah plans to continue her education in the field of computational biology and bioinformatics by attending a PhD graduate program in the fall of 2008.

MICHELLE HUBELE

is a senior at Boston College. Apart from her major in Theology, she has spent time studying globalization and writing. She hopes to pursue a career in the print-media industry that allows her to integrate her three areas of interest.

DANIEL KENNY

is a sophomore from Whitestone, New York majoring in Sociology. Kenny found the inspiration for his essay in a class titled "Sociology of HIV/AIDS" in the spring of 2007. He hopes to pursue further degrees in sociology, while remaining heavily involved in community service. He thanks his instructor, Professor Aimee Van Wagenen, for providing an engaging and important course.

SEAN MCMAHON

is a junior from Weston, Massachusetts majoring in Political Science. His interests revolve around political philosophy and American politics, and his paper comes from a class he took as a sophomore with Professor Candace Hetzner. Sean's thanks go out to Professor Hetzner, and all his professors, both in and out of Political Science, for their continuing instruction and support.

TIM MOONEY

hails from Grand Rapids, Michigan. A junior in the College of Arts & Sciences with aspirations in public policy, Tim is majoring in Political Science. He currently works as a research assistant for Professor David Deese, studying energy and security in the Middle East, and also worked with Professor Kay Schlozman last year on her Project for Political Equality. Tim spent last summer on an advanced study grant, researching "Casino Proliferation in the Great Lakes Region," a project on which he plans to base his senior thesis. He is also in his second year on The Heights Editorial Board where he serves as Opinions Editor.

is a senior in the College of Arts & Sciences with a major in Political Science and a minor in International Studies. She is greatly interested in the connections between public policy, faith traditions, and culture. Born and raised in Dallas, Texas, she is currently pursuing post-graduate opportunities in human rights, advocacy, and further education. She gives many thanks to the family, friends, professors and mentors who have helped her throughout the years and have always supported her passions.

JACQUIE SMYTH

is a student in the Arts & Sciences class of 2009, as well as a member of the Honors program, studying History and Economics. Her academic interests include classical history and issues of gender and sexuality, and she is also tragically excited for Econometrics. In the future, Jacquie strives to become a museum curator, but immediately after graduation she hopes to travel the world. Hailing from Portland, Oregon, she writes for Boston College's yearbook, Sub Turri, and sings with the University Chorale.

PAUL WENDEL

is a senior in the College of Arts & Sciences, hailing from Thousand Oaks, California, and majoring in Theology and International Studies with a concentration in Political Science. This past summer he interned at the Carr Center for Human Rights Policy at the John F. Kennedy School of Government in Cambridge, Massachusetts. His involvement with the Pedro Arrupe International Immersion Program at Boston College inspired him to pursue his topic and further explore the issue of global poverty.
