A woman is the creator of the world, the sustainer of life, a sacred being who embodies mother and society. His role has historically been regarded with high respect and attention in every society. He has found his place not only at home, but also in society, and has an indispensable power in the development of culture and nation.

A woman's sanctity begins with her role as a mother. Motherhood is a great and sacred task given by nature to a woman who sincerely wants to be a mother. A mother gives birth to her child, raises him, raises him with hard work and raises him to be a useful person for society. Thus, a woman, being able to show herself in society, makes a great contribution to making the whole world peaceful and tolerant.

On March 7, 2022, the President of the Republic of Uzbekistan issued Decree PF-87, titled "Measures to Further Accelerate Systematic Support for Families and Women." This decree approved the National Program for Increasing the Activity of Women in All Areas of the Country's Economic, Political, and Social Life for 2022–2026, along with the complex action plan for the implementation of this program in 2022–2023. These documents aim to strengthen the family institution, enhance the social and political activity of women, create conditions for them to realize their potential in various fields, ensure the absolute respect for their rights and legal interests, provide comprehensive support for motherhood and childhood, increase the influence and activity of women in society, reward their labor fairly, and expand efforts to support their organizational, entrepreneurial, and business skills[1]

Additionally, a woman's spirituality, morality, and behavior are factors that define her sanctity. A woman plays an active role not only in the family but also in spreading social and cultural values in society. Her hearts, full of love and compassion, attract many people and play an important role in the development of society.

Today, the role of women in society has become even more significant. Their achievements in science, economics, politics, culture, and other fields provide numerous examples. Women, like men, have the opportunity to test themselves in various fields and actively participate in the development of society with their labor. Recognizing the sanctity of women and their role in society signifies respect not only for the woman herself but also for society and the nation.

The sanctity of women is not limited to their roles as mothers and women in the household, but they must also play an indispensable role in shaping society in various roles. Their right to education, the ability to express their opinions, the opportunity to work freely, as well as the guarantee of freedom and equality, all contribute to making society fairer and more stable.

In the New Uzbekistan, a number of laws and regulatory documents have been adopted to protect the rights of women. The labor rights of women, their right to education, and access to healthcare services are being expanded. In Uzbekistan, the role of women in the family is highly valued, and necessary conditions are being created for them to engage in various fields of activity. As a result, women are actively participating in economic, political, and cultural life, and their role in society is growing. Significant initiatives have been implemented to involve women in social activities and help them find their place in society. Numerous projects are underway to encourage women to participate in politics, education, science, and the economy. Special programs are being developed to train women in new professions, guide them toward entrepreneurship, and ensure social security. Moreover, necessary measures are being taken to create new job opportunities for women and ensure their equal rights in the labor market[2]
