Abstract: Building a China-Thailand community with a shared future is of great significance to deepening bilateral relations and promoting regional stability and development. China and Thailand have deep ties in history, culture and economic development, and jointly building a community of shared future will not only consolidate these traditional friendships, but also open up broader areas for future cooperation between the two countries. By strengthening political mutual trust, economic mutual benefit and cultural exchanges, the establishment of a China-Thailand community of shared future will promote cooperation at a higher level and bring more tangible benefits to the two peoples. In addition, the initiative will also have a positive impact on regional and global stability and prosperity, especially in promoting regional economic integration and addressing global challenges. This paper explores in depth the development model of jointly building a China-Thailand community of shared future, aiming to promote the coordinated development of the two countries and the region.

Keywords: China-Thailand community of common destiny; Development; New power.

1. Introduction

In the current era of globalization, the construction of China-Thailand community of common destiny is particularly important. With the deepening integration of the world economy and the ever-changing international situation, the cooperation between China and Thailand can not only promote the common development of the two sides, but also contribute to regional and even global peace and development. Building a community with a shared future means strengthening cooperation in political, economic, cultural and other fields, and solving problems encountered in development through joint efforts to achieve mutual benefit and win-win results. This will not only help strengthen the economic ties between China and Thailand, but also deepen mutual understanding and friendship in cultural exchanges and technical cooperation. In this process, the two countries can jointly explore a development model adapted to the new era and inject new impetus into the long-term development of the region and the world.

2. Advantages of Jointly Building a China-Thailand Community with A Shared Future Under the Development of The Two Countries and The Region

2.1. Deepening political mutual trust promotes regional stability

Jointly building a China-Thailand community of shared future has significant advantages in strengthening political mutual trust between the two countries. Deepening political mutual trust will help the two countries maintain a high degree of consistency on major international and regional affairs and jointly safeguard regional peace and stability. By strengthening inter-governmental dialogue and cooperation, China and Thailand can properly handle various complex issues in bilateral relations on the basis of mutual respect, equality and mutual benefit. The strengthening of political mutual trust has laid a solid foundation for the two countries to carry out cooperation in broader areas and created favorable conditions for regional peace and development.

2.2. Win-win economic cooperation promotes development and prosperity

In the field of economic cooperation, the establishment of a China-Thailand community of shared future has brought win-win business opportunities and development potential. Bilateral cooperation in trade, investment and infrastructure construction has not only promoted bilateral economic growth, but also contributed to regional economic integration and common prosperity. Especially under the Belt and Road Initiative, China-Thailand cooperation in connectivity projects has provided new impetus and opportunities for regional economic development. The deepening of economic cooperation not only improves the quality and level of economic development on both sides, but also provides a good example and platform for the development of other countries in the region[1].

2.3. Cultural exchanges promote people-to-people ties

The China-Thailand community of shared future has demonstrated its unique strengths in cultural exchanges and people-to-people cooperation. By strengthening cultural exchanges, the two countries can promote people-to-people ties and enhance mutual understanding and friendly feelings. The cultural cooperation between China and Thailand covers many fields such as education, art and sports, which not only enriches the cultural life of the two peoples, but also deepens the cultural identity and emotional bond between the two sides. The strengthening of cultural exchanges helps build closer friendly relations between the people and lays a solid social and cultural foundation for the long-term development of bilateral relations.

3. The Principle of Jointly Building a China-Thailand Community with A Shared Future Under the Development of The Two Countries and The Region

3.1. Mutual respect and trust form the cornerstone of our relationship

The primary principle for building a China-Thailand community of shared future is mutual respect and trust. Mutual respect and mutual trust means that the two countries respect each other's sovereignty, territorial integrity and national interests in mutual exchanges and cooperation, and handle various issues in bilateral relations with equality and respect. This principle requires China and Thailand to fully take into account each other's differences in history, culture, society and development stage in their exchanges and cooperation, and avoid imposing ideas and models on others. Cooperation based on mutual respect and trust can ensure the long-term stability and sustainability of bilateral relations and provide a solid foundation for the in-depth development of bilateral relations.

3.2. Win-win cooperation for common development

Win-win cooperation is a key principle for building a China-Thailand community of shared future. This principle emphasizes that bilateral cooperation in economic, political, cultural and social fields should aim at achieving mutual benefit and win-win results, and ensure that the fruits of cooperation can benefit the two peoples equally and impartially[2]. Win-win cooperation also involves the two sides working together to find effective ways to resolve possible challenges and differences, while promoting common prosperity in the region and beyond. In practice, win-win cooperation requires the two countries to seek balance and common interests in trade, investment, cultural exchanges and other areas to ensure that both sides can reap tangible benefits from cooperation.

3.3. Sustainable development leads the future

Sustainable development is an important principle for building a China-Thailand community of shared future. This principle requires the two countries, while promoting economic and social development, to give full consideration to environmental protection and rational use of resources, so as to ensure that today's development needs do not harm the interests of future generations. In China-Thailand cooperation, the principle of sustainable development requires both sides to consider long-term economic, social and environmental effects in the planning, implementation and evaluation of projects, promote green economy, clean energy and ecological protection projects, and jointly address global challenges such as climate change and environmental degradation.

4. The Development Model of Jointly Building a China-Thailand Community with A Shared Future Under the Development of The Two Countries and The Region

4.1. A diplomatic development model based on political mutual trust

In building a China-Thailand community of shared future, the diplomatic development model based on political mutual trust plays a decisive role. This model emphasizes maintaining close political dialogue and high-level exchanges in international and regional affairs to promote mutual understanding and trust. Under this model, the two governments exchange views on international and regional issues of common concern and jointly formulate coordinated policies through regular bilateral meetings, strategic dialogues and diplomatic consultations. The deepening of political mutual trust will help the two sides carry out cooperation in a wider range of fields and provide a solid political foundation and support for building a community with a shared future.

Taking the diplomatic relations between China and Thailand as an example, the two countries have experienced a course from the cautious exploration in the early days of diplomatic ties to the current in-depth strategic cooperation, demonstrating the importance of political mutual trust in the development of bilateral relations. The building of political mutual trust is first reflected in the frequent and in-depth high-level exchanges. For example, the leaders of China and Thailand pay regular state visits and have in-depth exchanges on bilateral relations and international and regional issues of common interest. Through these exchanges, the two countries can communicate their respective national policies and strategic intentions in a timely manner and effectively avoid misunderstanding and suspicion. At the same time, these high-level exchanges have also provided guidance and impetus for bilateral relations. Moreover, in actual diplomatic operations, China and Thailand have shown mutual respect and support. For example, in international affairs, the two countries often coordinate and support on major international issues, such as assisting each other on multilateral platforms such as the United Nations, and jointly safeguarding the interests and rights of developing countries. In handling bilateral relations, the two countries respect each other's core interests and major concerns, and refrain from actions that harm each other's interests on sensitive issues. In addition, political mutual trust is also reflected in the cooperation between the two countries in regional security and development. For example, China-Thailand cooperation in security cooperation along the Mekong River, counter-terrorism and combating transnational crimes has not only strengthened bilateral security cooperation, but also contributed to regional stability and prosperity. Such cooperation is based not only on common security interests, but also on deep political mutual trust between the two countries[3].

4.2. Mutually beneficial and complementary mode of economic cooperation and development

In the economic field, the construction of the China-

Thailand community of shared future should follow the cooperation and development model of mutual benefit and complementarity. Based on market principles and business sustainability, this model focuses on tapping the complementarity of the two economies and strengthening cooperation in trade, investment and infrastructure construction. Through this model, China and Thailand can not only maximize their economic benefits, but also promote regional economic integration through joint efforts, injecting new vitality into the economic prosperity of the two countries and the whole region. Such mutually beneficial and complementary cooperation will also help the two countries form a closer economic alliance in the face of global economic challenges.

Taking China-Thailand economic cooperation as an example, the cooperation between the two countries in trade, investment, infrastructure construction and other fields fully embodies the principle of mutual benefit and complementarity. In terms of trade, China and Thailand are each other's important trading partners. China's machinery and equipment, electronic products, textiles and other exports to Thailand, while Thailand's agricultural products, food and rubber exports to China. This trade mode not only promotes the economic development of the two countries, but also meets the needs of both markets. In particular, under the framework of the Free Trade Agreement, China and Thailand have further enhanced the convenience and efficiency of trade by lowering tariff barriers. In terms of investment, China and Thailand have actively promoted two-way investment. For example, Chinese investment projects in Thailand cover a wide range of sectors, including infrastructure, energy, agriculture and electronics manufacturing, while Thai companies are also actively investing in China, especially in agricultural processing, tourism and services. These investment projects have not only created jobs for the local people, but also promoted the exchange of technology and management experience and improved the competitiveness of enterprises from the two countries. In terms of infrastructure construction, a prominent example of China-Thailand cooperation is the China-Thailand railway cooperation project. The project aims to promote regional connectivity and economic integration through the construction of a railway network linking the two countries. The China-Thailand railway will not only help facilitate the flow of people and materials, but also further strengthen the cooperation between the two countries in the fields of transportation infrastructure and related industries.

4.3. Interactive modes of cultural exchange and people-to-people cooperation

In the field of culture and humanities, the development model of the China-Thailand community of shared future should emphasize the interaction of cultural exchanges and cultural cooperation. This model encourages the two countries to carry out extensive and in-depth exchanges and cooperation in education, art, media, sports and other fields. By promoting direct people-to-people contact and exchanges, this model can not only enhance mutual understanding and friendship between the two peoples, but also promote cultural diversity and mutual learning among civilizations. The deepening of cultural exchanges and people-to-people cooperation will help build a solid social and cultural foundation and provide strong support for the long-term development of the China-Thailand community of shared future.

Between China and Thailand, this mode of interaction has facilitated in-depth cultural exchanges and people-to-people cooperation through multiple channels such as education, arts, sports and media. In terms of educational cooperation, China and Thailand have strengthened exchanges and cooperation in the field of education through mutual scholarship programs and exchange of students and teachers. For example, cooperative programs between universities of the two countries, including academic research, joint degrees and short-term exchange programs, allow students and faculty to visit each other to learn more about each other's education systems and cultures. In addition, China and Thailand also actively promote each other's language teaching, such as setting up Chinese courses in Thai schools and teaching Thai in Chinese schools, which not only promotes language skills, but also deepens cultural identity and understanding. In the field of art, China and Thailand regularly hold cultural festivals, art exhibitions and performing arts activities. For example, traditional Thai dance and music have toured various cities in China, while Chinese calligraphy and painting exhibitions have also been exhibited throughout Thailand. These activities not only provide opportunities for the people of the two countries to appreciate each other's culture and art, but also enhance mutual respect and appreciation of culture. Sports exchanges are also an important part of China-Thailand cultural exchanges and people-to-people cooperation. Sports events, such as table tennis and badminton, have often become the focus of common attention of the two peoples, which has enhanced the friendship and understanding between the two peoples. In addition, the two countries have also carried out cooperation in sports coach training and youth sports exchanges to jointly improve the level of sports competition and promote sports culture. Media cooperation is also an important way to promote cultural exchanges. News organizations of China and Thailand regularly send journalists to each other for news exchange and reporting. Television and film cooperation projects, such as co-production of documentaries and TV series, have enabled the people of the two countries to have a more intuitive understanding of each other's lifestyle and cultural characteristics.

4.4. The mode of cooperation between the two countries to jointly address challenges

In addressing regional and global challenges, the building of a China-Thailand community of shared future should adopt a collaborative model of jointly addressing challenges. The model emphasizes close cooperation between the two countries in areas such as environmental protection, public health, counter-terrorism and regional security. By sharing information, coordinating policies and taking joint actions, China and Thailand can respond more effectively to various challenges and crises. This mode of cooperation has not only enhanced the influence and voice of the two countries on the global stage, but also contributed to regional and global peace and stability. By facing challenges together, China and Thailand can further deepen mutual understanding and enhance the depth and breadth of bilateral cooperation.

For example, in terms of environmental protection, China and Thailand have jointly promoted the Mekong River basin protection project. In the face of environmental pollution and ecological degradation in the basin, the two countries have jointly carried out a series of water resources management, pollution control and ecological restoration projects. These projects not only improve the ecological environment of the Mekong River basin, but also improve the quality of life of local residents. In the field of public health, especially in the face of a global public health crisis such as the COVID-19 epidemic, China and Thailand have demonstrated an outstanding spirit of cooperation. The two countries have shared epidemic prevention materials, medical technology and epidemic information, and sent teams of medical experts to each other for experience exchange and technical support. Such cooperation has not only strengthened bilateral cooperation in the field of public health, but also contributed to the global fight against the epidemic. In terms of regional security, the cooperation between China and Thailand in counter-terrorism and combating transnational crimes is also a manifestation of the cooperation model of jointly addressing challenges[4]. The security agencies of the two countries have conducted in-depth cooperation in intelligence sharing, joint law enforcement and border management. These efforts have not only enhanced the security of the two countries, but also made important contributions to regional stability and security. In addition, the two countries have also conducted extensive cooperation in the fields of climate change, energy cooperation and sustainable development. The joint research and development and promotion of clean energy technologies, research on the impact of climate change, and cooperation in sustainable development projects demonstrate the concerted efforts of China and Thailand in addressing global challenges.

5. Conclusion

Through the diplomatic development model based on political mutual trust, China and Thailand have strengthened inter-governmental dialogue and cooperation, providing a solid foundation for bilateral relations. In the economic field, the mutually beneficial and complementary cooperation model has not only promoted the economic growth of the two sides, but also made positive contributions to regional economic integration. The deepening of cultural exchanges and people-to-people cooperation has enhanced the mutual understanding and friendship between the two peoples and laid a solid social and cultural foundation for the long-term development of China-Thailand relations. At the same time, the cooperation between the two countries in jointly addressing challenges has strengthened regional security and stability and made important contributions to regional and global peace and development. Therefore, jointly building a China-Thailand community of shared future is of great significance to promoting the development of the two countries and the whole region, and will help build a more harmonious, stable and prosperous regional environment.
