It's back to the Atlantic for DAVID O. LANE who became chief librarian and professor at Hunter College in New York City on July 14,

Mr. Lane

1969. As assistant university librarian at UCSD during this past year, David has contributed a great deal to the management of this rapidly expanding library and to its efforts to provide a faculty, accustomed to multi-million volume collections, with a reasonable level of research adequacy. His ability to work effectively with faculty, staff, and students will do much to assure his success as he takes on the challenging assignment of Hunter College. With a new building to plan and much-needed library services to develop, his initiative and creativity should result in a library well worth watching.

Before coming to UCSD, Mr. Lane was director of the acquisitions study carried out under the Office for Research and Development of the American Library Association with the aid of a National Science Foundation grant. For a number of years he was assistant director of libraries at Boston University. Earlier appointments included head of public services at the Polytechnic Institute of Brooklyn, head of the government publications department of Northern Illinois University and circulation/reference librarian at Flint College, University of Michigan.

He is a graduate of the University of Michigan and of its school of library science. He was engaged in study under a doctoral fellowship at the graduate library school, University of Chicago, when we were fortunate to convince him to come to UCSD. He has published a number of articles in library periodicals on government publications, record collections, catalog card production, and selection of academic library materials.

When this writer made a move after only a brief stay at another institution, a confirmed New Yorker noted that while the family might be used to frequent moves, he wondered what the dishes and piano thought! In David's case, several thousand phonograph records must be among the most travelled in the country. Even though David has found New York to his liking, it is probably safe to predict that this may not be the last move for the recordings. If opportunity offers, the many friends he has made in California will be happy to welcome him back to the West Coast when he has accomplished his objectives at Hunter College, or has had enough of the Big City.—Melvin J. Voigt, University of California, San Diego.

In September A. P. MARSHALL becomes director of the library at Eastern Michigan University at Ypsilanti. He is accompanied by his wife Ruthe, whom he has given to State librarianship, although she is trained in another profession. His Missouri and all-types-of-libraries-wide circle of close friends have appropriately demonstrated their high esteem and personal regard for him before his departure. Essentially, their message was deep regret for the loss of his professional influence from their midst. Faculty and students at Lincoln University, where he has been librarian since 1950, are searching hopelessly for an equally effective replacement who can as capably double in brass as A. P. has done as Coordinator of Federal Grant Programs (over $300,000 in results), Faculty Advisor to Student Government Association, and as Executive Secretary of the Alumni Association. His capabilities have been again illustrated this summer by his teaching a course in administration at Missouri University's newly accredited school of library and information sciences in Columbia, thirty-one commuting miles away.

A. P.'s continually alive and wide-ranging interest in library matters—local, state, national, academic and older—has properly earned him a wide reputation as a wise counselor, a willing participant, and an effective leader among professionals. He is equally knowledgeable and at home as a story teller at a conference for children's librarians as he is as a speaker at regional trustees conferences, or as a committee member planning statewide library growth and development. From all personal contacts, gained from taking the initiative and expecting real progress with the project at hand, has emerged the fact that his quality of determination is balanced with optimism, and his perseverance offset by his ready sense of humor. His popularity is pleasantly screened with a natural modesty. His dedication to librarianship has not only inspired his staff, but has also advanced to the point that he has offered no dissuasion to his daughter's determination to convert her profession from teaching to librarianship.

A. P. is leaving his bachelor's degree alma mater. It was also there, years ago, that he served as assistant librarian in his first professional position. The University of Illinois gave him both a library degree and an MA in history. He extended his stay there to do further graduate library work. Since being at Lincoln as the librarian he has completed more graduate work in history.

His second professional position was that of librarian at the State Teachers College in Winston-Salem, North Carolina. This tenure was interrupted by a stint in the Navy during World War II, where again he gravitated into shipboard library practice.

While at Lincoln, A. P.'s principal concern has been to build a collection—it nearly tripled in size—and operate a service that meets the needs of the students and faculty. He put order and good administrative management into effect to improve service, then concentrated on winning administration approval for higher salaries, more and better prepared personnel, and higher book budgets. While they will be challenged in his new post, A. P.'s administrative talents and experience will be better utilized in the larger operational scene. He considers administration and surveys as his fortes.

He is a writer, also. He has published a history of Lincoln University and was co-author of North Carolina Libraries. In Missouri he has been the editor of both the Missouri Library Association Quarterly and the Lincoln University Alumni Bulletin.

Professionally, A. P. is not only a joiner but also an active member, and he usually winds up with an organizational office. He was both secretary and president of the Missouri Library Association and chairman of divisions and committees in the state and national associations. He is one of the eight appointed members of the National Advisory Council on Library Resources, established by Title II of the Higher Education Act, which functions within the U.S. Office of Education.

That part of his life outside his professional commitments is given over in like manner to involvement and action. He has been a member of Mayor's Commissions on Human Rights in Winston-Salem and Jefferson City. He is still a dedicated Boy Scout leader and a church official.

When Michigan receives A. P. Marshall it will be getting a fisherman of no mean ability, and a baker of fruit cakes par excellence, as well as an activist in professional and community affairs. It will be getting truly "a man for all seasons."

When he arrives in Ypsilanti, one of his first responsibilities will be to plan an addition to a two-year-old library building which must be tripled in size to accommodate a rapidly expanding collection and a student body that will nearly double in numbers in the next decade.

He is "cut out" for the job.—Paxton P. Price, St. Louis Public Library.

On August 1, 1969, GEORGE PARKS assumed the position of director of libraries at the University of Rhode Island, thus continuing a rapid and very deserved rise in the field of library administration. His success is a tribute both to him and those library administrators who recognized his talents and exploited them to the advantage of everyone.

Mr. Parks

A graduate of Phillips Exeter Academy and a Phi Beta Kappa from the University of New Hampshire, Mr. Parks began his graduate studies with a scholarship from Johns Hopkins University. He soon discovered, however, the opportunities available in libraries to bright and properly ambitious young men and joined the staff of the Enoch Pratt Free Library in Baltimore. The library administration there quickly realized his potential and awarded him a trainee grant which allowed him to pursue graduate library work at the University of Michigan, where he earned his AMLS in 1962. After returning to Enoch Pratt, he rose through a succession of increasingly responsible positions to that of assistant to the assistant director.

The next sharp eye to perceive Mr. Park's capabilities and potential for growth belonged to John Russell, formerly director of libraries at the University of Rochester, who appointed him assistant director of libraries at Rochester in February, 1966. During the next three and one-half years, his talents for university library management were developed and refined in the crucible of rapid change and administrative difficulties. Initially responsible for personnel, equipment and buildings, he soon came to share with the director and the associate director the overall responsibilities for management of the University library system.

The true test of his mettle was to come in mid-1968 when both John Russell and his associate director "split the scene." Mr. Russell was granted an academic leave during his last year as director in order to serve as librarian of the American College in Switzerland; his associate (this writer) decided to learn for himself whether or not there is such a thing as "Potomac Fever" and joined Stephen McCarthy in the office of the Association of Research Libraries in Washington, D.C. Fortunately for the University and its libraries, George Parks was there to plug the leaks and man the administrative pumps. His year of stewardship was characterized by intelligent and sympathetic direction of the staff, improvement in salaries, and by more than satisfactory progress in the construction of the large new addition to the central library. He never faltered as walls came tumbling down around him and the staff (literally); as water leaks developed in the new construction; and as large numbers of staff, faculty and students were threatened alternately with frostbite and asphyxiation from dust.

As a consequence of this trial by fire—there also was one of those during the construction—George Parks brings to Rhode Island intelligence, dedication, experience, a maturity that belies his thirty-four years—and a lovely wife and two daughters. There can be no doubt that there are good years ahead for both the Parks and the University of Rhode Island Library.—Louis E. Martin, Association of Research Libraries.

REMINDER TO COLLEGE, UNIVERSITY LIBRARIANS

Have you completed your report for the U.S. Office of Education's Fall 1969 survey of college and university libraries? Questionnaires were mailed in April 1969 to the office of the president of each institution. If you have not received your copies of the questionnaire (OE Form 2300-5, 3/69), please inquire of your appropriate institutional officer. The reporting date for this survey is "not later than October 1." A prompt response from everyone will insure the publication of a report that will be of maximum utility to all college and university librarians.
