Profiles

JERRY D. CAMPBELL has been named university librarian and vice provost for library affairs at Duke University, effective July 1. Campbell is currently director of the Bridwell Library and associate professor at the Perkins School of Theology at Southern Methodist University, a post he has held since 1980. Prior to his assuming his present duties, he was director of the Ira J. Taylor Library and assistant professor at the Iliff School of Theology in Denver.

Campbell received his master's of divinity degree from the Divinity School at Duke University in 1971. He earned an MLS at the Graduate School of Library Science at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, in 1972 and was awarded a Ph.D. in American history by the University of Denver in 1982. Campbell served as the president of the American Theological Library Association in 1981-1982. He has had extensive experience with the preservation of library materials and the automation of library services.

LAWRENCE DOWLER, associate librarian of Harvard College, became librarian of Harvard's Houghton Library on May 1, succeeding William H. Bond who had retired in 1982.

Dowler came to Harvard in 1982 from Yale University Library, where he had been associate librarian and acting director of the Beinecke Rare Book and Manuscript Library. He had been at Yale since 1970 and had also served as supervisor of processing in the Department of Manuscripts, Sterling Memorial Library; assistant head, acting head, and head of that Department; and associate librarian for manuscripts and archives.

He holds a doctorate in American history from the University of Maryland, and his many professional activities have included participation in the National Information Systems Task Force on Automation, the Society of American Archivists, the National Historical Publications and Records Commission Connecticut State Advisory Board, and the Research Libraries Group/RLIN Task Force on Automation of Manuscript Cataloging.

Dowler has also been appointed special assistant to the director for special collections, a new position in which he will advise the director on the coordination of the University Library's many activities concerning special collections and help bring potential donors in touch with the appropriate Harvard library.

NEW TECHNOLOGY

• At the American Optometric Association Symposium on Vision in the High Tech Society in Washington on March 20, optometrist Vince King spoke on the hazards associated with video display terminals (VDTs). Common eye complaints of VDT operators include headaches, blurred vision at near and far seeing distances, itching and burning eyes, eye fatigue, flickering sensations, and double vision. King said that routine data entry tasks create the most complaints about vision, and that bifocal wearers may be the most susceptible because the traditional bifocal is positioned too low and is probably too strong a power for looking at a VDT. King said that eyestrain can be reduced by restructuring mundane tasks, and he cited one study in which productivity improved and complaints decreased when data entry was divided into 40-minute batches. Breaks were spent looking into the distance or doing tasks requiring minimum visual effort.

• The Biblio-Techniques Library and Information System (BLIS) has been acquired by Indiana University for its circulation and technical processing. When fully operational, the software will serve all Indiana University campuses.

• Micrographic Systems of Connecticut, New Haven, has contracted with the Women's History Research Center in Berkeley, California, to produce the Center's publications on silver film. The Center distributes materials on women and history, law, health, and mental health. For more information, contact the Women's History Research Center, 2325 Oak St., Berkeley, CA 94708; (415) 548-1770.

• The New York Library-Line (NYLINE) began operating on May 1 when over 50 libraries and library systems in the state launched a subset of the American Library Association's electronic information service, ALANET. NYLINE members can use ALANET for electronic mail service and obtain the New York State Library's electronic newsletter, NYLINE News. The costs for the network are being supported by Title III Library Services and Construction Act funds. NYLINE members currently include 22 public library systems, 9 research library systems, and 12 school library systems.

• The Pine Cone is marketing a light-weight vacuum cleaner called Mini-Vac that is designed for cleaning the hard-to-reach areas of microcomputers, typewriters, and other office equipment. Mini-Vac runs on a 9-volt alkaline battery, has two different interchangeable wands and bristle brushes, and is only 5 inches long. The machine costs $29.95 (plus $2 handling) and may be ordered from the Pine Cone, Blake Building, Dept. CRN-85, Box 1378, Gilroy, CA 95021.

• The University of Michigan Library, Ann Arbor, has acquired seventy Zenith-150 microcomputers for staff use from Zenith Data Systems. Each 320K, dual-disc machine includes an internal modem, printer, and integrated software package. The selection of Zenith equipment was based on a review of available hardware by library staff and available pricing agreements for computer equip-
