

ACRL awards for 1999

Honoring accomplishments and supporting professional development

by Jack Briody

ACRL provides opportunities to recognize important contributions to the field of academic or research librarianship through the ACRL Awards Program. The ACRL Board of Directors, with the help of vendors and hard work from ACRL members, provides support for these recognition opportunities. ACRL currently has 15 awards in three categories: achievement and distinguished service awards, research awards/grants, and publications.

These opportunities are made available thanks largely to the ongoing support of vendors with strong ties and interests in the academic/research field who provide funding for 10 of ACRL's 15 awards. The award juries are comprised of ACRL members appointed by either the ACRL president or the appropriate section's chair. The juries rely heavily on the ACRL membership to act as their eyes and ears in finding the truly commendable and outstanding of the profession.

Each award has a flyer (available on ACRL's homepage or from the ACRL office) that gives information on the award amount, criteria, submission procedures, and who to contact for assistance or questions. Members are strongly encouraged to make nominations or applications for these awards.

Most awards have a December 1, 1998, submission deadline.

The ACRL awards are listed below; sponsors are noted in parentheses.
