DR. RICHARD A. FARLEY, a librarian formerly with land-grant universities in Kansas and Nebraska, has been named director of the National Agricultural Library of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Dr. Richard Farley

Dr. Farley, formerly director of libraries for the 2-million volume McGill University library system, Montreal, Canada, assumed his new duties July 1. He succeeds John Sherrod, who resigned in April 1973.

Dr. Joseph F. Caponio, who had been serving as acting director of the National Agricultural Library, left June 9 to join the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration as director of the Environmental Science Information Center.

Dr. Farley's first library positions were at Beloit College and the University of Nebraska. He was director of the Drake University Library, Des Moines, Iowa from 1949 to 1951, then interrupted his career for three years to obtain his master's and Ph.D. degrees at Illinois.

In 1954 he was chosen associate director of libraries at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, where he remained until 1963, leaving to become a professor and librarian at Kansas State Teachers College, Emporia. He was appointed professor and head of the land-grant library system at Kansas State University in 1966, and in 1972 he was named director of libraries at McGill University.

Dr. Farley served on the ad hoc committee for the National Agricultural Library studying an agricultural sciences information network, and he is a member of The Associates of the National Agricultural Library, Inc., a group that promotes the development of the library.

Dr. Farley is a member of ALA and has been a member of the ALA Council, served as president of the Kansas Library Association, and is a member of the American Association of University Professors and the State Library Advisory Commission.

JAMES H. RICHARDS, JR., formerly director of the University of Wyoming Library, has been appointed head librarian at Gettysburg College, Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, effective August 1.

James H. Richards, Jr.

Mr. Richards holds both the B.A. and M.A. degrees in history from Wesleyan University, Middletown, Connecticut, and his degree in library science from Columbia University. He served as librarian at Earlham College, Richmond, Indiana; assistant librarian at George Washington University, Washington, D.C.; and librarian at Carleton College, Northfield, Minnesota, before going to Wyoming.

He has regularly contributed articles to professional journals. He has also served as consultant for several colleges, and the U.S. Office of Education.

Active in nine state, regional, and national associations, Mr. Richards has filled numerous posts in the American Library Association since 1954, including those of director on the Board of the Association of College and Research Libraries, 1965-69; president of the Library Administration Division, 1970-71; and Councilor, 1970-72.

DR. CHARLES D. CHURCHWELL, associate provost for academic services at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, has been named university librarian at Brown University, effective July 15, 1974. He replaces David A. Jonah, who retired this spring after a thirty-nine-year association with the Brown library system.

Churchwell, who was director of Miami University libraries from 1969 to 1972, was one of six persons recommended by the American Library Association this spring for the position of Librarian of Congress. He has been assistant director of libraries at the University of Houston, 1967-69; assistant librarian with the University of Illinois libraries, 1964-67; reference librarian at

INSTANTANEOUSLY

That's how fast SCISEARCH
retrieves the information you need from the life sciences journal literature.

*When you need the literature search now.
When you need to know about the most recent developments in a field.
When you have a complex search that conventional library techniques can't handle. That's when you need ISI's new SCISEARCH, the computerized on-line retrieval file that gives you quick, easy, economical access to one of the world's largest sources of information on the life sciences journal literature. To provide more current, more complete information to your research scientists. To serve them more quickly and efficiently. To save time for you and your staff. To lower your library's searching costs.*

ISI's huge life sciences file is being made available to researchers, librarians and information specialists within the U.S. and Canada through the widely used SDC Search Service, an on-line, interactive retrieval service of System Development Corporation.

Easy Access. Stressing ease of access, SDC's on-line retrieval program—ORBIT—will permit you or your search specialist to conduct extremely rapid searches through a two-way communications terminal located in your own facilities. In a typical 10 to 15 minute "conversation" with the computer—you type simple English language statements—you can easily formulate your questions, examine preliminary results, employ on-line dialogue to improve your understanding of the file's contents, then refine and tailor your search to specify exactly what you want from the file. And because the system is tied-in to a nationwide communications network, most subscribers will be able to link their terminal to the computer in Santa Monica, California, through a local phone call.

Over 400,000 Items. Covering every article from about 1,100 of the world's most important life sciences journals, SCISEARCH will initially offer a searchable file of over 400,000 items published since April, 1972. Each month, approximately 16,000 new items will be added until the average size of the file will be about one-half million items and cover 2½ years. This monthly update means you can search current literature many months before it appears in printed indexes.

Tough Searches Made Easy. To assure you maximum retrieval efficiency in dealing with this massive file, SCISEARCH enables you to make the simplest to the most complex literature searches. For example, you can search by title words, word-stems, word-phrases, authors, and organizations or by any combination of these techniques. In addition, citation searching—an exclusive feature of ISI's data file—permits you to locate additional items about a subject if you know about an earlier publication on the same subject.

What You'll Get. For every item retrieved, you can receive a full, on-line bibliographic description. This includes: all authors, full article title, journal citation, language indicator, a code for the type of item (article, note, letter to editor, review, etc.), an ISI® order number and all references from the bibliography contained in the retrieved article. You can use the order number to place on-line orders for copies of articles from ISI's Original Article Tear Sheet service (OATS®).

For More Information. We'd like to tell you more and actually demonstrate how SCISEARCH can help you and your colleagues. Simply call Mel Weinstock at (215) 923-3300. Or write him at the address below. ©1974 ISI the New York Public Library, 1959-61; and a library science instructor at Prairie View A & M College in Texas from 1953 to 1958.

As associate provost for academic services, Churchwell held primary responsibility for Miami University's million-volume library system, plus the summer school and continuing education programs, registrar's office, telecommunications, gerontology center, the Scripps Foundation for Research in Population Problems, and all honors and interdisciplinary studies programs at the Ohio university.

Previously, as Miami's director of libraries, he administered libraries on three campuses, oversaw the reorganization of the main library, developed a new personnel program for the 100-member library staff, and supervised the planning and construction of a $3.5-million library addition. In 1971-72 he was named an American Council on Education Academic Administration Fellow and spent the year studying administrative styles in cooperation with the presidents of Miami, Antioch, Cleveland State University, the University of Illinois, and Jackson State College.

At Brown, Churchwell will bear top-line responsibility for the management and development of the 1.5-million-volume library system which includes the Rockefeller, Sciences, and Pembroke libraries, and the major special collections housed in the John Hay and Annmary Brown libraries. The new director of libraries has indicated his first undertaking will be in the area of personnel policy. "Many concerns have been expressed by the staff here," Churchwell said. "There is clearly a need to establish a new administrative structure which will respond effectively to those concerns."

A Florida native, Churchwell received a B.S. degree in mathematics from Morehouse College in 1952. He holds a master of library science degree from Atlanta University, and a doctoral degree in library science from the University of Illinois. He is married and the father of two children.
