LIBRARY UNIONIZATION STUDY

Professor Archie Kleingartner and Ted Guyton of the Graduate School of Business Administration, University of California, Los Angeles, are currently gathering information for an extensive study of unionization and collective bargaining among professional librarians. Because of the dearth of published materials available on this topic, they would be deeply grateful to hear from any person directly involved in library union activity or who has information on the topic. It is planned that the study will result in a monograph length history of the topic which will be of interest both to students of labor and to professional librarians. All inquiries and correspondence may be addressed to Archie Kleingartner, Assistant Professor of Industrial Relations, Graduate School of Business Administration, University of California, Los Angeles, California 90024. ■■

You can own hundreds of rare old books for less than the price of one.

For the past 31 years, we've been preserving rare English-language books and periodicals on microfilm. Today, we have five collections of them.

The list below tells you what type of publication goes into each collection. If you'd like to find out more about these collections, write for a prospectus.

As you'll discover from the listings, if you buy our collections, you'll pay five or six hundred dollars for each year's worth of our microfilming.

But while these aren't exactly bargain-basement prices, they're cheap compared to what you'd pay to acquire the originals. Assuming, of course, that you could acquire the originals in the first place.
