Population Characteristics of Academic Librarians

Bob Carmack
Dean of Library Services
University of South Dakota and

John N. Olsgaard
Documents Librarian and Archivist
I. D. Weeks Library

From time to time questions of the “population characteristics” of academic librarians arise which find no ready answer in the literature. With faculty, including librarians, of state-supported institutions of higher education in South Dakota now concluding their second year of a collective bargaining agreement, questions and discussions of our own experiences in South Dakota invariably turned to queries about collective bargaining in academic libraries in general. Not satisfied with information in the literature, the authors began to compile data for an article on collective bargaining in academic libraries. In so doing, some interesting population characteristics of academic librarians emerged. These “social indicators” may provide some interesting inferences about the composition of academic librarianship as a whole.

Building on the assumption that the membership of the Association of College and Research Libraries is representative of academic librarianship in general, a statistically valid stratified random sample survey of ACRL members was conducted in February–March, 1981. The survey conducted was to provide data on the current status of collective bargaining in academic libraries. Using Jean Kennelly’s May, 1975, survey questionnaire on collective bargaining in academic libraries¹ as a base, augmented with questions of our own, a survey instrument was prepared and administered to 700 members of ACRL. 60.4% were returned which, in and of itself, may be somewhat indicative of the interest of academic librarians in collective bargaining. Data was compiled on a general population basis but was also broken down into regional subsets. The distribution of states in each region was identical to that used in previous research.² States included in the regions were as follows:

Northeast: Connecticut, Delaware, District of Columbia, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont

Southeast: Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia

Midwest: Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, South Dakota, Wisconsin

Southwest: Arizona, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Texas
