Contributors to this Issue:

Jay Prosser is Reader in Humanities at the University of Leeds. He was the Principal Investigator on the AHRC Research Network Grant “Ottoman Pasts, Present Cities: Cosmopolitanism and Transcultural Memories,” and he is part of a team based at Leeds working on Roth and various Roth collections around the world. Prosser is the author and editor of several books covering autobiography, literature, and photography. Most recently he completed a family memoir, involving Ottoman Jews, entitled Empire’s Loving Strangers: Journeys Through a Camphorwood Chest.

Dhruv Raina is a professor at the Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi. He studied physics at the Indian Institute of Technology in Mumbai and received his PhD in the philosophy of science from the University of Gothenburg University. His research has focused upon the politics and cultures of scientific knowledge in South Asia and he has published extensively on related subjects, as well as co-edited volumes such as Social History of Sciences in Colonial India (2007), and more recently Science between Europe and Asia (2010). Previously, he was a Fellow of the Institute of Advanced Study in Berlin and the first incumbent of the Heinrich Zimmer Chair for Indian Philosophy and Intellectual History at Heidelberg University.

Hye Lim Nam is a recent graduate of the master's program in transcultural studies at Heidelberg University. Her research interests include twentieth-century intellectual history, emotion history, and children's literature, particularly in a Korean context. Her thesis topic explored the history of an emotion during the democracy movement in South Korea.

Barbara Lutz is a cultural scholar and art mediator based in Berlin. She studied cultural sciences and aesthetic practice with a focus on fine arts at the University of Hildesheim and at the Escola Superior de Artes e Design in Caldas da Rainha, Portugal. After her studies, she worked for several international photography festivals and for the Table of Free Voices by the global initiative dropping knowledge e.V in Berlin. She was a visiting lecturer at the University of Hildesheim and was part of the training program Curatorial Practice and Exhibition Management at the University's Center for Lifelong Learning. In her latest projects, she worked with students of the Theatre Lab in Bangalore, India and co-edited the book Situating Global Art: Topologies-Temporalities-Trajectories (Bielefeld: transcript, 2018). Currently, she is completing her PhD. In her work, she focuses on a current understanding of transculturality in the field of exhibition practice and art mediation, and on the analysis of exhibitions in a global context with a special focus on documenta.

Sophie Florence completed her undergraduate degree in Religious Studies at Victoria University of Wellington (Te Whare Wānanga o Te Ūpoko o Te Ika a Māui), and studied Sanskrit at Kathmandu University Centre for Buddhist Studies at Rangjung Yeshe Institute. She is currently a student in the master's program in Transcultural Studies at Heidelberg University, and visiting student in Religious Studies at Yale University, both supported by the Deutscher Akademischer Austauschdienst (DAAD). Her research is in Buddhist Studies, with a focus on sexuality and pleasure in Sanskrit and Pāli literature.
